MRS. LUSCOMBE ENTERTAINS

The home of Mrs. T. L. Luscombe, Quarton road and West Maple avenue, was the scene of a very pretty party last Friday noon, when Mrs. Luscombe entertained, for a number of her friends, at luncheon. Dainty and especially attractive was the charming arrangement of larkspur used for the table center piece. The combination of the same flower and pink roses decorating the rooms, where the guests were later seated for a long game of cards and sewing was also very pretty. Seated by a dainty set of place cards were Mrs. Thomas Cobb of North Woodward avenue, Mrs. Fred E. Fisher of Walnut Glen, Woodward avenue; Mrs. D. W. Heyworth of Bloomfield Hills, Mrs. Robert D. Baker of Southfield avenue, Mrs. Wellington Evans of Larkspur and Quarton Roads, and the Misses Martie and Sadie Sly of North Woodward avenue.

Following her recent move to 130 West Maple avenue, from Pierce street, Mrs. C. C. Brown has opened an attractive shop in the front of her new residence, where she is handling the Schwezer Importer's line of dress materials and fancy cloths. She is also continuing with the California Perfume line which she has been handling for some time, but believes that in the new quarters the old customers will find it more convenient and that new patrons will be more apt to locate her shop.

MARY WALKER VIEWS THE VILLAGE FROM A PLANE

Our Society Reporter Gets a Birds-Eye View of Oakland County And Thrills Over It

By MARY E. WALKER

What may be called, I think, my greatest experience so far came to me last Monday evening when I visited the Fiske aviation field which is located just south of the village. I went as representative from my paper and upon making myself known, was more than pleased with the courtesy shown me.

For the past two weeks the Fiske Service has been in operation in this vicinity, from a large field and has been attracting considerable attention from not only local residents, but also from motorists passing on Woodward avenue and from farm residents who frequently saw the plane and finally investigated. For instance, when I arrived, a farmer was landing, who had taken the trip for the express purpose of viewing his land from a new angle, and I can say that I am sure the angle was entirely new to him, if it impressed him as it did me later.

During the several minutes following my arrival before the plane landed, I gathered a few facts for which I had taken the journey and was completely overwhelmed upon being asked if I had any desire to go up as the guest of the company. It occurs to me now that I have never had any unusual desire to experience the thrills of flying, but I can truthfully say that when I thought the opportunity was near at hand for that experience, I did not hesitate to take advantage of it. Here I might say that the trip itself—the joy of it—the excitement of it—and the newness of it—gave me things to think about that had never come into my mind before.

If at any time I have entertained fears concerning such a trip or have wondered what I would do in case of an accident, I did not, on taking the actual trip. Not only did all fear leave me when I realized that I was about to experience something altogether new, but I found myself in possession of a "dare-devil" attitude. I was ready for the worst; and the worst that entered my mind had no especial horror for me. Since "coming to earth" after the joy of it all, I have tried to figure out why that feeling was so strong, for certainly there was every reason given me when I was in the air, for realizing that my life was not my own and that whatever occurred, I could not help.

We left the field and it was not until I was well up over the trees, sailing along at a moderate rate of speed, that I knew we had left the earth. We climbed and climbed before we turned at all, and then started toward the heart of Birmingham. Our plane lowered a bit here, to give me a better view of my home-town.

Birmingham has always been quite a place to me and always will be in a certain sense, but upon viewing it from above, it surely appeared insignificant—just like so many tiny clay houses in a real estate office, with toy trees and pencil marks for the roads. I had always felt that I was a part of the earth and had my place there, but when I found myself flying through the air and saw that even the largest of things on earth were so very small and seemingly meaningless, I seemed to shrink in my own estimation. It is good for one sometimes, I think.

One always relates the thrills—I have noticed—after a first flight, and to be strictly up-to-date I suppose I must do the same. There can be no doubt in my mind about having had them, as I have said, not from the actual flying but from several sudden turns we took. The first, as I remember, was when the pilot was attempting to draw my attention to something of interest and as I could not understand him, he shut off the engine. At this point—let me emphasize—only for a second, did I catch my breath, believing beyond doubt that we were unexpectedly headed straight for the field, and that we were to have a through trip without any stops.

My first thrill was barely over and we were sailing along smoothly when the lakes near Pontiac were pointed out to me. To give me a more complete view, we turned sideways, making me feel as though we were going this time to earth, but as rapidly, but by a different route, that of rolling over and over on our side until we finally landed to find everything still and over.

I am not prepared to say just how high we were, but I saw that we remained quite high, and to the side of the landing spot, in order that we could make a good landing. That is done by turning directly toward the spot and lowering the nose, as I would call it, of the machine, and starting with all the force the engine had, with one long sweep, for the earth.

I need not hesitate about which was the greatest thrill, for none could be greater than this one of landing prayed to be to me. My little "sandtable patch" houses and toy trees" suddenly left their rightful places and started through the air, sometimes away from us and sometimes meeting us, and still at other times, suggesting 'hide-and-seek' with us. Before I could sensibly realize that we were landing, we had done so. Not to stop, though, for we skimmed over the landing three times before we finally killed the engine.

The notes that I gathered before going up and after landing amounted to this: That the field is to be a permanent one under the direction of the Fisk Aviation Co., of Detroit, and that Captain Carl Squires, the pilot; F. C. Fiske, the owner; Dan E. Tabin, the mechanician, and W. F. Weed, the manager, are to have charge of the business, taking passengers up daily. For a few days this week the party has been operating from Indian Village, Pontiac, but are returning this week-end to remain in Birmingham. According to Capt. Squire, there were many paid passengers taken up last week and judging from the number of applications already in for trips up on the return of the party, the enterprise is proving a most successful one.

ANOTHER FISH STORY

While his parents were visiting with friends at a cottage at Echo Lake last Tuesday, Master Claude Streb of Pierce street, took a boat and left shore to try his luck at fishing. He got a bite and thinking that it meant only an ordinary fish, he raised his rod too quickly and snapped it in half. In spite of his handicap, the young fisherman stuck to the job and landed his catch in the boat. It proved to be a two and one-half pound pike. Upon reaching the boat the fish flopped off the hook but Claude managed to hold it until his dad arrived with a stringer.

Let the People Know

A public utility is a public servant, vital every day to every home and place of business in the City. It ought to be thoroughly understood by the people, for their good as well as the utility's.

This Company believes in giving the people the facts about its business and problems.

The business of the public utility is at best complicated and not readily understood; it requires explaining,—not excuse-making; but explaining.

From time to time we want to let the people know as far as we can about those things in which the people are most vitally interested and about which they ought to know in order to have a practical understanding of the character, function and problems of their utilities, gas and electric.

We shall offer no excuses—just explanations. A public servant, as much as a private servant, has both a right and a duty to make a report of his stewardship.

We shall not burden you with long-winded statements. We shall always be brief.

We believe the people are fair when informed and welcome information.

Let the people know the facts and we believe they will appreciate it and co-operate with us more and more, realizing that our interests are identical with theirs and realizing, too, that we all alike are human.
