Legionmas Christmas Tree

REGINA gazed down at the end of the wisp of white. A light snow was falling like millions of sparkling diamonds and pearls, yet Regina saw nothing. Her Christmas tree had not come!

It mattered not that the day was a wonder day and that the Christmas was close at hand. Nothing mattered to Regina save the fact that she had forgotten the tree. Sunday school class a glorious tree, and that now there was no tree for it.

She argued with herself that she might have known that the New York shops could not be relied upon to send a tree to the suburbs at so short a notice, but that did not help the situation.

Regina shrank from facing those 12 little girls whose smiles would vanish in childish disappointment. She had learned that the tree they had been promised was not to be theirs.

The tears brimmed over and fell. Regina's vision was cleared and she was clearing the air. She had a plan. The miniature fir tree in the vacant lot near the factory. A sense of delight swept over Regina. After all, her children would have a tree!

Regina picked up her ax and with much difficulty swung it again. "I say, there you—that tree belongs to me!" The man was coming toward her. Regina stopped and turned. "This is a vacant lot," she called out with asperity.

The approaching man whistled. His speed quickened. He made an involuntary movement to raise a cap that in his haste he had forgotten to put on.

It came upon the midnight clear, That glorious song of old, From angels bending near the earth, To touch their harps of gold: "Peace on earth, good will to men," From heaven's peaceful spheres. The world in solemn stillness lay, To hear the angels sing.

Still through the cloven skies they come, With peaceful wings unfurled, And still their heavenly music floats Above us and below us plans: They lead on hovering wings, And even over the household eaves, The blessed angels sing.

Yes, with the woof of sin and strife, The welcome angels have rolled Two thousand years of wrong. And even over the household eaves, And bear the angels' strain: Whose forms are bending low, Whose arms and feet are outstretched, With painful steps and slow— Look not for gifts and golden hours Come swiftly on the wing: O'er rest beside the weary road, And hear the angels sing!

And this one: Hark, the glad sound! The Savior comes, The Savior promised long! Let every heart prepare to meet him, And every voice rejoice to greet him; He comes, the prisoners to release, In chains and bonds of sin; He comes to break the fetters bold, To set the captives of the world at liberty; He comes to break the fetters bold, To set the captives of the world at liberty.

Regina laughed because it was the safest thing to do for the present. "And I have brought down 12 little sentimental boys with the same program and carry a tree here! I got, and a Santa Claus drove up over the real reckoned on getting one in the village."

Regina laughed, and the whole world seemed to echo with the laugh. "I have tried even the department store!" She gazed into David Langhorne's eyes. "I am sorry for the poor little soul who we are disappointing—my class worked so faithfully all last summer."

"By Jove," David said, "I read once of some people who had the Christmas tree out of doors! They had great bonfires and the tree was lit by a thousand candles as well as the stars, and a Santa Claus drove up over the real snow! Couldn't we do something like that?"
