"QUEER" SYNOPSIS—Newcomer in a small town, a young newspaper man, who reads the story and writes the unaccountable actions of a man...

"One twenty-five," I answered, and felt my ears growling red with mortification. "Too late, I remembered that the newcomer in a city, who should have his tongue among the natives until he has unraveled the skein of their relationships, alliances, feuds...

However, in my confusion I warmly greeted no one, and I moved not to blunder again. Mr. Dowden thanked me for the information for which he had no real desire, and, the next morning, he appeared in my office with a report...

"Well, Edwood, do you want to bet a penny on another quarter?" "No," replied the businesslike son, "let's bet a nickel this time."

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her gown, shabby dresses, skirts, waists, coats, stockings, neckties, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything...

"I don't know," I said. "I don't know at all what I made of it." "He couldn't have been," her eyes grew very wide—"intoxicated."

"No, I'm sure it wasn't that." "Then I don't know what to make of it, either. All that wild talk about 'Bill Hammersley' and 'Stimpeloria' and spring-boards in Scotland and all."

"Why, there's no more a 'Bill Hammersley,'" she cried with a gesture of scornful emphasis, "than there is a 'Stimpeloria.'"

"He's lived there all alone," she said, solemnly. "I don't know how long, just sitting there evening after evening, all by himself, never going out, never reading anything, not even taking a walk."

"You're going to work?" she asked, as I turned toward the gate. "My dear girl, I don't have to go to mine."

"Because she said he was a man of no imagination." (TO BE CONTINUED)

On the other side of the board fence a door opened creakily, and out stepped a long, thin, pale man with a long, thin, pale face—that of the gentleman in the dressing-gown.

"Here we come!" it said; "me and big Bill Hammersley. I want to shake hands with you. I can jump any jumps three times as far as he can! Come on, Bill."

"I had an awful sick spell and for a long time I was in bed. I went to sleep and I woke up and I found I wasn't going to live long. Luckily for me, I heard of a doctor who had been helped by a wonderful new medicine called Aspirin."

The predominance of the foreign element in New York is the subject of many jokes. At a motion picture luncheon to the press the other day, as Tommy Gray, one of the city's wits, arose to speak, he looked about.

"I don't know," I said. "I don't know at all what I made of it." "He couldn't have been," her eyes grew very wide—"intoxicated."

The first and one of the most famous of the gates of London was Aldgate, which stood on the eastern bank of the River Thames. It was built in the Fourth century by Theodosius, the Roman governor.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are ex-claimed to be the best, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten?

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kline's Swamp-Root. I prepared it for many years and never hesitate to recommend for, in almost every case it shows excellent results, as so many of my customers testify."

According to sworn statements and certified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kline's Swamp-Root is due to the fact that it is a medicine that is built on the most every-thing in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder troubles. It is a uric acid breaker and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.
