THE AMERICAN LEGION

War Robs Three of Memory

Three men who have lost themselves and whose memory does not extend back to the day where they were bled; they are the most unusual cases on record at the National Bureau of Washington, D. C.

Hayward Thompson is a man who is the most peculiar case. He has forgotten who he is. In his head he is only a blank.

In searching Washington records for some trace of the lost man, it was found that a certain Hayward Thompson enlisted in the Marine Corps June 5, 1914.

Not so long ago a clean-cut young man appeared at a Los Angeles hospital. He was an American Legion member.

A third "unidentified living" lives at 735 North Third Street, Louisville. He is known as Leonard Wella.

"GREATEST HEROES" LIST

Sergt. Samuel Gluckman of the American "Devil Dogs" Rival for York-Woodfill Honors.

Another rival for the crown worn alternately by Sergeants York and Woodfill as the greatest hero of the World War has been uncovered by the United States Veterans Bureau. In the person of Sergt. Samuel Gluckman, member of the American "Devil Dogs" during the war and decorated by both the American and allied governments.

Although born in Austria, Sergeant Gluckman enlisted with the marines at the outbreak of the war and although too modest to tell the story of his achievements while fighting against the Germans, the American Legion at Washington discovered that Gluckman fought in seven major engagements: Verdun, Belleau Woods, Chateau Thierry, Marbach, St. Mihiel, Stossemont and Mont Blanc.

On the morning of October 3, 1918, Sergeant Gluckman started out to get water for his comrades. He returned without the water but with 20 Germans and a painful wound. The "Devil Dog" sergeant captured a lone German and instead of bayoneting him, captive forced him to lead him to the rest of the advance party. Coming onto the whole batch of 20, Sergeant Gluckman waved a hand grenade and ordered them all out of the shell hole they were occupying and into the arms of his American comrades. By executive appointment Gluckman is now employed at the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H.

Interesting. "You find the out-of-the-board interesting?" "Very," rejoined Miss Cayenne. "I am invariably surprised to find a number of people sitting perfectly quiet, waiting for some one else to do the talking."

Personal Viewpoint. "A man who swallows wood alcohol both reckless and selfish." "Unquestionably," replied Mr. Chugcins. "A man like that doesn't care whose radiator freezes!"

Her Army. "There's one thing I've always wanted to ask you about your life in France," she said. "Yes?" prompted the ex-captain tremulously. "What did you and the colonel usually talk about at meal times?" The Home Section. "Conditional. "Do women generally approve of the church alliance movement?" "Yes, if it is a movement up the aisle to the tune of a wedding march."

Nerve Enough. "We want a particularly brave man for this cause," said the studio director to the applicant. "What have you ever done to recommend you for the job?" "I wore a straw hat after the 15th of September," replied the applicant. "You're hired."—Film Fun.

Serious Effects. "My gas bill last month fairly took my breath away." "Mine did worse than that—it took all my cash away."—Boston Transcript.

The Reason. Mrs. Hichlight—"Why is it, doctor, that the weather has a more depressing effect on me than on most people?" Doctor—"Because, madam, you have more time to think about it."—Boston Transcript.

A Knock From Miss Knax. Miss Margy—"Isn't it wonderful, when you think of it, how a mirror can reflect one's face?" "Mine does—Yes, dear; I sometimes wonder how it can stand the strain."—Boston Transcript.

Those Girls. Agnes—"But how in the world do you get him to propose?" "Midge—Oh, easily enough. I told him that you were crazy about him and reminded him that it was leap year."—Boston Transcript.

One Doctor to 700 Persons. The United States has only one doctor to every 700 persons. Furthermore, the number of doctors seems to be decreasing in proportion to the population, which is increasing by some 2,000,000 a year.

Not So Hazardous. "Why have you returned to the speaking stage, m'body?" "A vaudeville audience is satisfied if you tumble into the bass drum," explained Yorick Hamm. "Doesn't expect you to fall off a 90-foot cliff?"—Film Fun.

One Theory. "How did Rip Van Winkle come to wake up and quit?" "I suppose they raised the rent of the woods where he was sleeping."—Judge.

Grief. "Why are you crying so, little man?" "My sister's cat died today." "Yes, how sweet! And did you love your sister's cat so dearly?" "Naw. But paw gives a lotta 'yer throwin' it in the yell."—American Legion Weekly.

Major General Gough Defeated. Maj. Gen. Hubert Gough, commander of the British Fifth Army which was overthrown by the German drive in the spring of 1918, was defeated for a seat in the English parliament.
