OUR PROPHECY

Dear Reader, do not consider this editorial a thing unlinked from patriotism. Do not think that the Editor of the Eccentric has gone "nuts" and is rambling towards bolshevism. As we write this we are both sane and complacent—albeit rather dignified—with the way things are running in this wonderful land of the free—free from most everything but strikes, privilege and pillage. So we indite this bit of prophetic prose.

We prophesy that, some time in the future—how long we do not know, depending upon the patience of the majority—these United States of America will, by the consent of the governed, pass the legislation necessary to remove from certain individuals the right to the ballot. Ere long, also by unanimous consent of the governed, the entire right to elect men or women to rule the destinies of this nation shall be vested in the hands of but a few people. And, after that, this right shall be vested in a body of men and women who will act as a sort of college, to appoint for the community, the state and the nation the men and women who shall make the laws, impose taxation, and otherwise administer to the general welfare of the people of this country.

What a glorious Utopia will then exist here—by that time perhaps all the world will be so situated.

Scientists tell us that this world is millions of years old. From our own books that chronicle the history of man we can view the great strides made toward a higher civilization by man—and when we think that 2,000 years of Christianity has worked wonders with a heathen civilization—what can we say of the future—even of the next hundred or so years?

According to our way of thinking, the majority of the people of this country have lost their inalienable right to vote. Their results of any election—local, state or nation—will show that less than half of the duly qualified electors attend the polls. These voters, by all the rights of fairness and equality, should be deprived of the right to do a thing that they do not want to do—a thing that they repeatedly refrain from doing whenever the chance comes for them to do it.

Witness the workings of Nature. What happened when, in olden days, (or even now) a person, perhaps in repentance for some wrong committed, did not use his arms or legs for a considerable period of time? Nature, (wise, good old artificer of the universe) gives us things to use. The accident who did not use their things he was given soon lost the ability to use them. By their very inactivity Nature decrees that a thing not used shall shrivel up and become as no more. So it ought to be that the right to vote—if man would but follow a bit more closely the workings of the subtle, perhaps unknown, thing or being that brought him into this world.

Deprive, or even threaten to deprive a man or woman of the thing that he or she should, by right, be allowed to do, and he or she will, in most cases, be roused from the lethargy that envelops him or her. Perhaps the exercising of the ballot will be stimulated by such legislation in the near future. But it won't last long—for man is too lazy—and so we get back to our prophecy.

If you, Dear Reader, think that we are wrong in our premise, just consider the method now used in selecting men for officers of trust in our army and navy. They must attend West Point or Annapolis. They must pass rigid tests in the use and practice of modern warfare. In this, at least, the people of this land have decided that the very portals of their country—on land and sea—shall be protected from the attacks of the world by only men who are fitted, not by privilege or sentiment, but by the necessary qualifications that are required for the proper performance of their tasks.

Webster defins a politician as "one versed or experienced in the science of government; a statesman". He also says a politician is "a schemer; an intriguer—ready to do anything that he apprehends for his advantage".

Dear Reader, when you go to the polls to vote, is your candidate a statesman—or just a plain "politician"? It's up to you to find out!

USE OF WORDS

"Use simple language!" is the cry of the magazine and newspaper editor. Simple? Ah, yes! Simplicity is an art. But do not confound simplicity with blankness. A sentence, a design, a machine is most perfect in the simplest form wherein it fulfills all the duties required of it.

A gigantic printing press appears complicated. In reality it is simple—as simple as it can be built to do the work it does. A hand stamp is simpler but it will not print a newspaper.

An intricately carved design in the stone work of a cathedral may not appear to be simple, but if it were reduced to its simplest form it would no longer be a design. It would be merely a geometric figure and would produce no effect but that of bareness. The framework of a human body is a skeleton. But who would call a skeleton beautiful or even complete? The simplest form of human being worth anything at all has all its flesh and bones. And the same rules apply to language.

"All thought and feelings aspire to be words", says Benjamin de Casseres. "If names, words, language do not exist, it is doubtful whether number would exist". And in speaking of a certain great author he says: "from sound he squeezed light and from blood and tears". Each word in our language has a specific meaning. Each word represents a distinct idea. The more words you know and understand the more material you have to think with and the easier it will be for you to build definite conceptions in your brain.

If it is necessary to use a six syllable word to express a certain thought, use it. If you say "sin" when you mean "transgression" you have not simplified your language. You have only clouded your meaning. To say "the dog has fleas" is better than to say "canine is afflicted with the carnivorous parasites". But beware lest your quest of simplicity lead you into the paths of crudity. Bareness is not beauty. Blankness is not simplicity. Bear in mind that language to be most effective must possess beauty must be complete; in short it must say something in the shortest and most beautiful way possible. Is is not big words that make some writers unintelligible. It is their blundering style. Master grammar! First see clearly what you wish to say. Then say is straight.

Now that the primaries are over and Senator Townsend has been declared the Republican nominee for re-election from Michigan, we wonder how many of the followers of Kelley, Baker, Shields (most of whom professed a goodly share of disgust toward Townsend) will vote in November. Chances are they will vote for their party more than they love him, but rather, because they love their "party" better. Poor logic, we believe—for no matter how good may be the "party" as an institution, they cannot be well set forth by a poor salesman in the marts of the competitive world.

According to reports of a Detroit newspaper, a motorman on the D. S. R. line there stopped his car to permit a pigeon to fly across the street. And yet this same motorman would sometimes skip right by a corner where several people were waiting for transportation. Oh, well, who'd want to be a pigeon for, that?

Better get your overcoat out from the moth balls—old King Winter will soon be here with his snowflakes.

One of our leading citizens has suggested the name "Manager Starr" for one of the new busses on Woodward avenue—how about it, Mr. Davis?

Politics is dead, someone has said. But not buried yet if our nose knows.

A new machine has been invented that turns out 50,000 cigarets an hour. That means so much more work for the grave-diggers and the coffin manufacturers.

"Army gas mask has limitations; does not protect against industrial gases"—headline. Nor against political campaign gases.

The first keyless watch was made in 1754. It was then that the jewelers started the gag about "it needs cleaning".

It is said the first piano in America was imported from England in 1734. We heard it at a movie house last night.

About the time they got to the light and settled down to read it the yell of the spectators convinced them that they were "sold".

Oh, my! wasn't it fun to see her run when the dish cloth she had flung?

PRESS PICKINGS

Although the rail and coal strikes greatly retarded the highway construction work in the state during the summer months, 80 miles of pavement, and a total of 240 miles of all classes of roads will have been completed at the end of last week, according to reports in the hands of State Highway Commissioner Frank F. Rogers.

Construction projects for which permits were taken out during the past week carried cost estimates aggregating $2,548,500, compared with $1,919,350 for the preceding week and $895,453 for the similar week last year in Detroit.

The total value of buildings for which permits have been issued by the building inspectural department of the village of Ferndale passed the million mark when the board of education of Ferndale school districts received a permit to erect a new school building in the southeastern section of the village last week. The new school will cost about $60,000.

The famous E. LeRoy Pelletier farm at Orchard Lake, consisting of 200 acres, is to be subdivided into residence lots. A short time ago Mr. Pelletier was offered $1,000,000 for his farm by agents who plan to develop between Cass and Orchard Lakes, with long frontage on each of these bodies of water, and is almost an island because of the close approach of the lake at both ends of the farm.

The village of Brightmoor, located near Redford on the Grand River road now boasts a population of over 1,000. Five months ago eight people lived there.

The village Comission of Ferndale, through its attorney, Ray E. King, has filed a suit in Justice Fred E. Goodrich's court for condemnation of property necessary for the widening and opening of Livernois avenue at the Eight mile road.

Announcement has been made that the state will pave Grand River avenue from Farmington's northwest limits to New Hudson at the first step in pavement from Detroit to Lansing.

It is the correct insulating lumber because it resists heat or cold like a woolen blanket. Reduces your fuel costs one third, gives added strength to a building.

CELOTEX is a great utility lumber. Use it for sheathing, plaster base (to which all standard interior plasters form a perfect bond) or sound deadener.

It is lighter than lumber, though you saw, plane and apply it the same as lumber and is available in suitable sizes for all forms of building construction.
