Not a Laxative

Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot gripe. When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movement by Nature's own method—lubrication. Try it today.

In Kentucky, which is a center of the horse-breeding belt, there are several hundred different varieties of trees, says the school book of forestry of the American Tree Seed Co. Farther south the coniferous species prevail. They are followed in the march toward the Gulf of Mexico by the tropical trees of southern Florida.

CHAPTER XIII—Continued.

Eaton was distinctly frightened by the revelation he just had had of Santone's clear, implacable reasoning regarding the bond of the blind man's delusions about him which were wrong—all had been the exact truth. It was clear to him that Santone was not a cold, calculating, unfeeling man, but a man of high intelligence, who was not only a keen observer, but a keen thinker. He was not only a keen observer, but a keen thinker. He was not only a keen observer, but a keen thinker.

As his mind revolved, almost in staccato fashion, these considerations, he felt that he was not only a keen observer, but a keen thinker. He was not only a keen observer, but a keen thinker.

"Where are you, Harriet?" he asked at last. She knew it was not necessary to answer him, but she felt that she should. She knew it was not necessary to answer him, but she felt that she should.

"How did he act?" Santone asked. She reviewed swiftly the conversation, supplementing his blind opinion of Eaton's manner with what she herself had seen.

"What have been your impressions of Eaton's previous social conduct, Harriet?" he asked. She thought for a moment, then she answered.

"I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

"That's all right," he said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

"I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

"I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

"I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

tion of the principals concerned in this correspondence; too often, she knew, one man or one group had carried out a fierce intent upon another; and sometimes she was aware, these bitter feuds had carried certain of her father's clients further even than personal or family ruin; fraud, violence and—was now—even murder were represented by this correspondence; for the papers relating to the Warren and the Latron murders were here. She had felt always the horror of this violent and ruthless side of the men with whom her father dealt; but now she knew that actual appreciation of the crime had passed as business had been far from her. Ah! strangely, she now realized that it was not the attacks on Mr. Warren and her father—overwhelming horror as these had been—which were bringing that appreciation home to her. It was her understanding now that that attack was not meant for her father but for Eaton.

Though Harriet had never believed that Eaton had been concerned in the attack upon her, she had, by the way, been checked and stifled because he would not even defend himself. She had not known what to think, and she had not known what to do. She had not known what to do.

"I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

"I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

"I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said. "I don't know, Father," she said.

more openly by word and look than he had ever done before in her presence. She was the more surprised at his doing this now, because she knew that Donald must have received from her father the same instructions as had been given herself to learn whatever was possible of Eaton's former position in life.

Before Eaton's entrance into her life she had supposed that some time, as a matter of course, she was going to marry Donald. In spite of this, she had never thought of herself as apart from her father; when she thought of him that her duty to her husband must be secondary to that to her father; she knew now that she had accepted Donald Avery not because he had become necessary to her but because he had seemed essential to her father and her marrying Donald would permit her life to go on much as it was.

Donald had social position and a certain amount of wealth and power; now suddenly she was feeling that he had nothing of the sort. She had the feeling that her duty to her husband must be secondary to that to her father; she knew now that she had accepted Donald Avery not because he had become necessary to her but because he had seemed essential to her father and her marrying Donald would permit her life to go on much as it was.

HONOR SHOULD GO TO CONFUCIUS

Earliest Idea of the "Shadow Show" Said to Have Been Recorded in 500 Years B. C.

The earliest idea of a moving picture was recorded in the time of Confucius, the Chinese philosopher who lived 500 years before Christ. In the deduction drawn from the story of the blind men by Wai Yen, a well-known figure in the English film world, who has exhibited in London a collection of relics and machines tracing the growth of the moving picture from its first primitive idea to its present form, says an exchange.

The "shadow shows" of Confucius are the first of all known endeavors to present animated pictures. The next period of progressive achievement is found in 1646, when Athanasius Kircher published a book in Latin entitled "Ars Magna lucis Umbrae," in which a description and illustration are given of a moving picture which the writer had evolved with mirrors and a tallow candle for illuminating it.

Included in the collection is the original disk which Edward Muybridge used to settle the controversy between two American footballers on the Alto Palo race course as to whether the four feet of a trotting horse were off the ground at the same time.

Dish Only for the Rich.

The ortolan is a very rare bird, caught only in Italy, and is served in a specially constructed dark room before being killed for market, and if during this process a severe thunderstorm takes place, the value of the bird is greatly increased.

It is a London hotel, a small wonder that at a London hotel a dish of ortolans for four diners cost the giver of the feast $30.
