Theatres

At the Baldwin Theatre, Royal Oak
The Rex Ingram, famous Metro director, who was in Miami when his latest production, "Where the Pavement Ends" which is at the Baldwin Theatre, Royal Oak, Sunday Monday, can spin his yarn with any actor in the world. On a trip to Nassau, in the Bahamas, he went through two terrific electrical storms in a forty-foot boat. The waves were so high that the waves swamp the cockleshell, whose decks were swept time and again by huge waves. And Rex Ingram spent the whole of his time on deck! He admits frankly that his courage was bolstered only by the fact that he preferred to drown in an ocean wave rather than suffer the qualms of mal de mer. It is a staffy, restful and absorbing night long while Joy raved over and John Russell, author of "Where the Pavement Ends" groaned in his bunk below, the boat fought its way through the tempest of darkness under the light of the reef of Cape Florida, announcing that they had gotten back to within striking distance of America.

"Where the Pavement Ends" was adapted by Rex Ingram and photographed by John S. Seaton. Alice Terry and Ramon Novarro play important roles.

A Norwegian sailor who has sailed all the oceans of the globe does some spectacular canoe work in several scenes from Thomas H. Ince's new production, "Soul of the Beast," which is to be shown next Thursday night at the Barron Theatre.

The sailor happens to be in the Sierras while the Ince players in this Metro picture were never before heard, but lured him there and he was vacating, he considered an ideal vacation, spending each day in canoe shooting the dangerous waters. Director John Griffith Wray promptly engaged him and used him in several exciting scenes.

At the Garrick, Detroit

That happy combination of delicious fooling, mystery, melodrama and burlesque—all mixed with the expertise of a French chef—"Captain Applejack," will be the offering of the Bonstelle Company at the Garrick Theatre next week.

It was offered in Detroit last year with a cast including Wallace, Edinger and Mary Nash, and proved one of the pleasant weeks of the season. Ambrose Applejohn is a Cornish gentleman of leisure, who lives with the exact schedule under which he operates daily thanks to the ministrations of his wife, his wife and his faithful butler. There surges within him a longing for the open, to match his wife with those of an arch-villain, to rescue from a base desire a fair maid, after the fashion set forth in books.

A girl arrives in the night, posing as a famous dancer from the domain of Leno, who is being pursued by a bolshevik spy. To the rescue, goes Ambrose, who with a fine display of ingenuity outwits the villain. Also he prides himself on the clever handling of the Pengards, who possess a pair of baggards in search of a chart that will show them the location of the fabulous treasure said to have been buried years before by Ambrose's ancestor, who was none other than Capt. Applejack, a fierce pirate. The second act is a dream, wherein Ambrose, having discovered through the medium of the ancient parchment the hidden treasure, calls of his ancestor, finds himself rigged up in all the regalia of a Spanish Mariner and treating the decks of one of those rakish craft, putting down nutty, defying the blood-thirsty ruffians who make up his crew, and determining the fate of the heroine with a cut of the cards, and emerging victorious from every encounter, whether of mind or muscle.
