Europe Now Wants Not Judicial Intervention but Partisan Intervention

By REPRESENTATIVE T. E. BURTON, of Ohio.

M I an optimist in world politics? No—and yes. I am suze many grave difficulties must be overcome before we can have international confidence and peace. Europe is in a deplorable condition. Doubtless it yearns! for a settled political and social order as ardently as any people can; doubtless its public thought and purpose are moving on as high a plane as the circumstances make possible, but it is full of trouble, and its every path toward general accommodation seems blocked. Its diversities are indescribable, its suspicions obstimate, its antipathies almost fathomless. One scarcely can descry a clear European horizon; in every direction are massed clouds and ceaseless lightning play. seless lightning play.

Think of Europe's innumerable and fixed segregations. Physically Think of Europe's innumerable and fixed segregations. Physically and psychologically it has memories of nothing but segregation. Montains, rivers and seas fight against peace in Europe. They peoples apart. They perpetuate harreds. In their work of prolonging human division they are aided by differing degrees of civilization, by antagonistic metial impulses, by discordant religions and by a babel of tongues. Add to these physical and mental barriers and disparities the numberless intractabilities common to all human nature and you have a problem that well may disparent ment horseful and resolute of afastemen. that well may dishearten the most hopeful and resolute of statesmen.

But the situation cannot rest here. Humanity must advance. Evolu-tion will not be denied. Intellectual and moral forces are gathering strength, peoples are traveling, frontiers are wearing down, education is spreading, infernational understanding, though slow-paced, is on the

Prospective Citizens Must Be Made to Love the American Moral Ideals

By DAVID KINLEY, President University of Illinois

We deplore the fact that many who have come to our shores from other lands to live their lives among us have failed to grasp as fully as we should like, or to love as dearly as we do ourselves, the government and institutions of our country. We have been casting about for ways and means to Americanize them.

I sometimes think that in our discussions of this subject we are confusing the kernel with the back. Love of country does not arise from mean intellectual knowledge of her institutions of large. Participies, is confusing the kernel with the busk. Love of country does not arise from mere intellectual knowledge of her institutions or laws. Patriotism is a sentiment, not a reason's conclusion. If we would have the stranger to our system of government be loyal to it, we must teach him not merely to understand it, but love it. We have been placing too much reliance on machinery of organization and too little on sentiment. What we need to instill into the minds and hearts of our prespective fellow citizens is not simply knowledge of the mere mechanics of our governmental organization, but some notion of what it stands for and what it has cover of what it means in history and activitate desclosured.

governmental organization, but some notion of what it stands for and what it has cost; of what it means in history and political development, in the promotion of freedom and human welfare. We must define and hold before them to love the spiritual in American life, the moral ideals that animate our people. We must be able to show them that under our system of government, with all its faults, they will be able to live a better life, to enjoy a greater welfare than they have been accustomed to.

Immigration's Problems Are Just Now Interesting and Very Perplexing

By MAJ. H. H. CURRAN, in New York World,

Immigration is at present interesting to everybody. And everybody is to have a plan to solve its problems immediately. People will tell on the telephone how to deal with immigration thoroughty. At present we have an immediate, pressing problem; how to get rid

At present we have an immediate, pressing problem: how to get rid of thousands of immigrants weekly so that the couple of thousand arriving daily can be handled. Two-thirds of the immigrants who arrive in this country land at Ellis island, and in the last four days I have been confronted with all the ramifications of that problem. During the last week and up to Saturday night we will have handled more than 16,000 immigrants. The most we can accommodate easily are 2,000 each day, so you see that we have cause for work and worry.

For those who can regard it impersonally this race for port is a next weeklers in the nature of class and with all the alcuner of a second content of the second content

For those who can regard it impersonally this race for port is a pretty problem in the nature of chess and with all the elements of a game of chance, because we never know exactly how many people we shall have to accommodate. But for those who are also interested in humanity our problem is not merely a pretty and perplexing game. What we do means comfort or lack of comfort for thousands, and I am interested in preventing suffering.

It Is Far Better for Man to Marry Good Blood Than Good Environment

By PROF. H. E. WALTER, Brown University.

There are three contributing factors that go to make up any man-or There are three contributing factors that go to make up any man—or woman—ind no-due of the three can possibly be omitted. The first is environment or the surroundings in which a person is brought up. It represents the opportunity or chance in life which one has. The second is natural capacity which is inherited from one's fore-bears. This is heredity of endowment. The third factor is the response which is made with a given inheritance, whatever it may be, within one's particular surroundings. Environment is the stage setting, inheritance the actor and the response what the actor performs upon the stage.

To reduce the matter to the simplest terms, the three fateful factors that determine a man—namely, environment, heredity and response—may each occur in at least three varying grades, indicated roughly as good, medium and poor. By combining these factors we arrive at twenty-seven kinds of men.

It is far better for men to marry good blood than good environment, because natural capacity usually leads, sooner or later, to an effective response which is likely in the end to insure a desirable environment.

General Pershing.-Religion contains the secret of and the impetus toward clean living. Therefore a steady effort is being made to put the hearts of men in right relation to God. In the army we are exceedingly anxious to keep pace with that great wave of sentiment which calls for a more practical application of the fundamentals of religion to all of the affairs of man. We may not see eye to eye the details of such work, but we are united on a common task.
