Mrs. Quillon Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her from an Operation

Muskegon, Michigan.—"After doctoring for eight or nine years with different physicians without any relief at all, they said that medicine would not reach my case and that I had an operation. I had heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I saw it advertised in different papers where some women had suffered just as I did and got well and strong again by taking the Vegetable Compound. I decided to see what it would do for me, and before I had finished the fourth bottle I was much better, the weakness stopped and the severe pains in my sides left me. I am now much stronger and do my own work and work in the factory besides an still taking the Vegetable Compound every day. It is the only medicine that has ever cured me. Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 17 Morris St., Muskegon, Mich.

Women should heed such warning symptoms as bearing-down pains and weakness, for they indicate some female trouble, and a persistent and faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will seldom fail to relieve.

Beasley's Christmas Party

By BOOTH KARINGTON. "From the Dispatch, hay?" Mr. Peck gave me greeting, as he wound his suit counter about his neck. "That's good. We'd most give you up. This here's Mr. Grist, and Mr. Henry P. Colton, and Mr. Gus Schulmeier. They all got acquainted with you. I've come around to let you know that you can't hang like a horse at no more, George Dowden! So you weren't invited, either."

"What friend?" "Dave Beasley. So you ain't quite good enough to dance with his high society friends?" "What are you talking about?" Dowden demanded, impatiently. "I reckon you won't be quite so strong for Beasley," responded Peck with a vindictive little giggle, "when you find he can use you in his business, but when it comes to entertainin'—oh no, you ain't quite the kid."

"Just hold your horses a little while," he returned. "I ain't no one knows, and so do Mr. Colton and Mr. Schulmeier. And Grist will take them and you two reporters to look at it. All right? Then come on."

"I'm glad to see you, Mr. Dowden." "I mean your going to take him along with us on this expedition, too?" "Take him?" Mr. Peck emitted an aerial bark of laughter. "I guess he's at Beasley's all right."

"What he isn't? He's at home—at Mrs. Appearthwaite's—playing cards."

"I happen to know that he'll be there all evening."

"I'm glad to see you, Mr. Dowden." "I mean your going to take him along with us on this expedition, too?" "Take him?" Mr. Peck emitted an aerial bark of laughter. "I guess he's at Beasley's all right."

"What he isn't? He's at home—at Mrs. Appearthwaite's—playing cards."

Dowden uttered a sharp, but fervent exclamation and stepped quickly to the door. "Peck!" he said, as he jerked it open. "Oh, I'm here!" declared that gentleman, stepping into view. "I've come around to let you know that you can't hang like a horse at no more, George Dowden! So you weren't invited, either."

Downen, giggling triumphantly. "What I tell you? How do you feel about it now?" "But where are the cats?" asked Dowden, gravely. "Dolls all comin'," answered Mr. Peck, with complete assurance. "The cats will be no more cats till they be gone to go home."

We plunged ahead as far as the corner of Beasley's fence, where Peck looked us again, and as we went together, shutting our hands and stamping our feet. Peck was delighted—a thoroughly happy man; his sour goggle of exultation had become contentous and the same joyful break was audible in Grist's voice as he said to the Journal reporter and me:

"I'm glad to see you, Mr. Dowden." "I mean your going to take him along with us on this expedition, too?" "Take him?" Mr. Peck emitted an aerial bark of laughter. "I guess he's at Beasley's all right."

Egyptian Noah's Ark Race. One of the curious spectacles witnessed by King Edward when, as prince of Wales, he visited Egypt, was a grand Noah's ark race, open to animals and birds. The strikers, who were all driven by their monitors, included an ostrich, a turkey, a peacock, a monkey, a pig, a cat, a dog, and a rat.

Beautiful silver nuptials in a window attracted the attention of the Woman. And then she noticed across the top of one of these nuptials some cats unobtruded with much cleverness. Playful cats they were, but even in their embowered faces they looked "artistic," as, of course, they should have done.

Did some cynical male fashioner ever decide on this touch or was this a creation for some flapper who could exclaim: "They're certainly the cat's pajamas!"—New York Sun.

Out of Date. The mid-Victorian aunt was paying her annual visit. It was Sunday afternoon and she had a charge of the baby flapper. Wondering how she should entertain her, she said: "Shall I tell you a story?" "Yes," assented the youngster in rather bored tones. "How would you like to hear about Adam and Eve in the beautiful garden?" "Oh, I'm sick of the Adames. Don't you know anything else?"

TRICKS EMPLOYED BY SMUGGLERS

Customs Officers Have to Be Very Wide Awake to Cope With Illicit Dealers in Drugs. The smuggler of drugs has many tricks and wiles whereby he evades the law and introduces his wares into the country. A favorite method is to use artificial flowers for concealing cocaine, opium, and other drugs. One consignment of opium was smuggled through in the stalks of artificial flowers, while cocaine has been found in veils. Vegetables are even more used for this purpose.
