Beasley's Christmas Party

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

Continued

Beasley had just opened the front door, returning to his home of the streets...

To a certain new reporter on the Dispatch the air and gusto of the streets...

Wonderful Japanese Towers. The most recent concrete tower in the world has recently been completed in Tokyo, Japan...

Sufficient Cause. "How did you happen to get sparkling Miss Tootsie-Berry?" asked an acquaintance...

Comedy and Tragedy. Let us step into my place and let me see your face occasionally, old man...

Comedian-Oh, but's all right-it amuses the children-London Tit-Bits.

"They like Bob," explained Hamilton. "Don't you, Mr. Humberg?"

"But what," exclaimed the old lady, "what in the name of the good God do you like in den names?"

The Humbergs had lately moved to Walnutwright from Constantinople, I learned; they had not come to live in town, however...

"The head and front (and backbone, too) of the opposition to Beasley was a cross-fisted, hard-knuckled, riven-rounder-soldier of man...

Several days ago your correspondent reported the invitation extended to King Albert by King Charles S. Mar Farland, general secretary of the Churches of Christ in America...

"I shared his confidence on this latter score, but was somewhat less sanguine on some others. There were only two persons of whom I had any confidence in Walnutwright...

"I picked up my hat and coat, and went to the office at which I had been given my sign, and found the conception of my journalistic day."

Down town the streets were crowded with the jostling heads and shoulders of the latter which swept a blinding glittering glow horizontally across them.

"What are you surprised about?" inquired Dowden. "Don't you know what our folks are like, yet?"

"The head and front (and backbone, too) of the opposition to Beasley was a cross-fisted, hard-knuckled, riven-rounder-soldier of man, one named Simon Peck."

It would seem to be a fact, however that the real founders of New York were in reality people from northern France or more correctly from the ancient province of Holland.

throughoutness, and because he never was for anything but for anybody in his life. I had a talk with the nutt-head the other day; he said our candidate ought to be a farmer, a man of the common people...
