American Individualism A Timely Message to the American People

By HERBERT HOOVER Secretary of Commerce.

WE HAVE witnessed in the last eight years the spread of revolution over one-third of the world. The causes of these explosions were not at all far greater depths than the failure of governments in war.

The war itself in its last stages has been a conflict of social philosophies—beyond the justness of centuries dogged beyond endurance by the conflict and freed from restraint by the destruction of war.

Now, as the storm of war of resolution and of emotion subsides there is left even with us of the United States men, much to be learned from the bitter lessons of human calamity.

Therefore, it is not the individualism of our country for which I speak, but the individualism of America. Our individualism differs from all others because it endorses these great ideas of which we hold our society upon the attainment of the individual.

Individualism cannot be maintained as the foundation of a society if it looks to only legalistic rights based upon contracts, property, and political equality.

Whatever was the case with regard to Old World individualism (and we have given more back than we have received from her) the truth that is important for us to grasp today is that there is a world of difference between the principles and spirit of Old World individualism and that which we have developed in our own country.

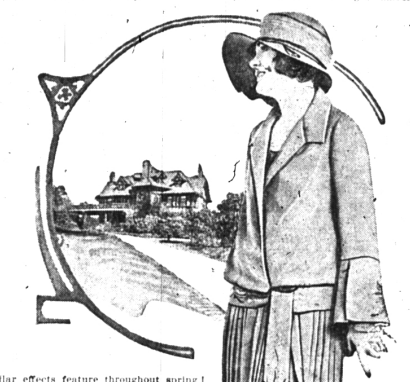

There are those who have been left in a sober doubt of our institutions or are confounded by bewildering catch words of every phase.

But then a nation whose idea of music is jazz, would accept popular novelists as its elucidators of social, mental and moral conditions.

We may at least feel tolerably sure of one thing. This country is not going back to the flimsy, prudish days when legs were called "limbs."

The real reason for our loss of prestige in Europe is the fact that we tried to do it a good turn by loaning it money.
