PAYING DEAR

It's a good wind that blows no one ill. Tomorrow the hunting season for deer opens and already the Upper Peninsula is flooded with enthusiastic lower Michigan hunters all anxious to bring home the bacon. Tomorrow many of the farmers and resident hunters of the Upper Peninsula will settle down for a period of staying indoors as a protection against stray bullets. Before another week has passed papers throughout the state will contain news items about the deaths of lower Michigan hunters accidentally shot by other lower Michigan hunters, and men who "didn't know their guns were loaded." In the newspapers will appear headlines such as "Shot Through Heart By Stray Bullet," "Detroit Man Accidentally Killed While Hunting," and so forth. And all because of carelessness and unfamiliarity of so many of the city hunters with the high powered rifles which will shoot a half mile in a fraction of time it is not a sport for the careless. All the game shot during the hunting season is pretty dear when paid for by a human life.

BRIDES AND GROOMS

Are people marrying younger today than did those of the last generation? The popular opinion seems to be that they are, but an investigation of the ages of 50 couples who recently applied for marriage licenses in Detroit, all of whom made their applications on one day, may offer an argument against this opinion. The average age of the 50 men who applied was a fraction over 30 years, while the average age of the women was a fraction over 27.

Out of these 50 couples, there were eight in whom the man and woman were the same age. With all but six couple the men were either older than their chosen mate, or of the same age. The youngest man to apply for a license was 18, and his wife-to-be was of the same age. The oldest man of the 50 was 68 years old, and his sweet-heart 62.

Of course this census was taken with only 50 couples as a working basis, but there is no reason why they should not be a representative group. At any rate the figures tend to override the impression that so many of the popular novelists and reformers endeavor to create—that most of the present-day marriages are among boys and girls who are not old enough to know their own minds. It is always the case that the extremes are given the most prominence, and undoubtedly this accounts for the "playing up" of the "child-marriages," especially by the more sensational newspapers. But our world may not be quite as bad off as some would endeavor to make out.

THEY HAD 25 KEGS ON TAP

Thursday night of last week "The Constables Club" of Detroit held a banquet in Dom Polski Hall. It was a momentous occasion—made so because, according to news dispatches, there were housed under one roof 25 kegs of beer and a great array of Detroit's officialdom. Among those present were Sheriff George L. Walters, L. Eugene Sharp and James M. Jeffries, justices of the peace; Councilmen John A. Cronk, John C. Nagel and Sherman Littlefield; Arthur Dingeman, several deputies, a few assistant prosecutors, and over a thousand ordinary citizens. And, it is said, beer flowed freely and everybody knew it.

Just what right, for instance, Sheriff Walters had in allowing the place to stage such an affair is probably known only to him. Thus do we see how the Constitution of the United States is lived up to by the men we elect or appoint to do so. Though it has been said that the Volstead Act "is a joke," we are of the opinion that the enforcers of it are even funnier.

GOOD FORCES AT WORK

Even though moths and rust are at work all the time destroying material things in this world, a kindly Providence is at the same time busy creating new life and new things. So it is in society.

Witness the recent dedication of the new Belle Isle bridge. This structure was opened up to the public last week. It will afford a better means of entrance to the Isle during the hot summer months. Thousands of people in Detroit will have their summer brightened a bit more for this bridge. Yes, there are forces at work destroying for this bridge. But, as with Nature, good things come to the surface which counteract and repay. The world is getting better—merely because the people in it are better.

TREAT COUZENS' ATTACK LIGHTLY

A man who makes Detroit his voting headquarters last week came out and bitterly attacked a citizen of Dearborn regarding the latter's various activities. No doubt there are hundreds of similar cases of such attack everyday all over the land. But the case referred to above found front page position in all the newspapers because the attacker was James S. Couzens and the other person happened to be Henry Ford.

It's a common trait of humanity to find fault with another. No doubt Mr. Ford has certain characteristics that are not altogether lovable—Mr. Couzens certainly is not free from at least a "five per cent" taint of unpopularity—but no one to date has ever brought undeniable charges against his honesty or conduct of the Ford Motor Co. While associated with Ford, Couzens was making more money than he ever made before in his life. Under ordinary circumstances Couzens should have remained as Vice-President and General Manager of the Ford Motor Co. He quit, though, because, he says, "I could not agree with Ford on certain matters." Any wonder why he attacks Ford now that he can no longer make any money through him? Which shows us that a good deal of Couzens' propaganda against Ford is tainted with bitterness, with unfriendliness and, perhaps, unfairness. Thought given words under such conditions should be treated lightly.

PARENTS, READ THIS OVER!

Mothers and fathers of Birmingham boys and girls ought to be interested in what successful men have to say about the things necessary upon which to build a future life. The following ideas relative to the education of children were expressed by prominent businessmen in Chicago recently:

"The fundamentals of a successful business life should not be measured in dollars and cents, but in achievements," said J. E. Gorman, president of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad. "Honesty, loyalty and ambition may be stated as the basic principles. Personality sometimes goes a long way, but personality without the requisite knowledge does not carry a young man to that height that he would attain by a complete mastery of the subject in hand."

"Cultivate and form the habit of trying to see the best side of your associates and fellow workers, avoid and suppress the habit of knocking and disparaging others; cultivate neatness, tidiness and cheerfulness, courtesy and respect for those in authority," says W. W. K. Sparrow, vice-president, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad.

"Take advantage of each opportunity that presents itself daily in your student associations; hold on to every problem until you get the solution; make the most of the opportunity and you can not fail to find a measure of success and satisfaction, limited only by the amount of intelligent effort which you put into your work," writes Albert R. Dyon, industrial relations branch, Western Electric Co.

"The gate of opportunity is wide open to every young person who is in real earnest and is in the line of work most interesting to him, executives are in constant search for steady-going young people with ideas and ability to demonstrate their value," Elbert G. Drew, secretary, Illinois Bell Telephone Co.

"High school training should give a discipline in orderly mental habits, in accuracy, dependability and a general attitude of alertness and eagerness to grow. Business is looking for workers with just such qualifications. No amount of schooling can take the place of fundamental character and willingness to work up from the bottom, but when combined these qualifications make it possible for the worthy high school graduate to go far in business," says John G. Shedd, chairman of the board, Marshall Field & Co.

"Choose a task that you can put your best efforts into and start without delay; what counts most is the way you go about doing whatever you take up; getting on in business is much like climbing a rope hand over hand," Lucius Teter, president Chicago Trust Co.

"Pay strict attention to those things for which you attend school, learn as much as possible; do not disparage the school with which you are connected. Give the best you have and show loyalty. Seek to develop, besides excellence in studies, something which will train your body and afford you pleasure," Belvin T. Traut, president First Trust & Savings Bank.

They were discussing Couzens and his five per cent beer. Finally, one of them said, "If he keeps it up his political standing will be about zero percent."

While most of Germany's inhabitants are near starvation, France continues to keep them all fussed up. And Poincare, chief cook of France's boiling pot of armament, is telling his countrymen what a helluva great man he is—the reason being that another election will be held there in the spring. Poincare is a good politician—and a poorer Christian.

Local citizens who have ideas about a new Municipal Building ought to impart them to the Village Commission. No one will deny that we need a decent edifice for carrying on Birmingham's business. People who pay taxes here should unload their thoughts—favorable or unfavorable—on their elective officials whenever necessary. "Two heads are better than one—consider the barrel."

Forty-three Years Ago

Died in Southfield on Sunday, Oct. 21, of honorific of the lungs, Mrs. Hugh Purdy. Mrs. Purdy and her husband were among the earliest settlers of Southfield and she was greatly respected. Funeral services were held at her late residence on Monday afternoon and were conducted by Reverend J. P. Gilson.

A dispatch from Berlin says 12,000 troops have been concentrated in view of possible war with China.

The Indians on Skagit river, Oregon, who drove United States surveyors from their lands, claim that they have never traded their lands and that they will not give them up without some equivalent. The trouble has been compromised and the surveyors are again at work.

The French cabinet has resolved to continue a strict enforcement of the statutes decrees against the secret press.

Twenty-five Years Ago

Monday, November the 7th, Prof. W. D. Cizhe called the people together to decide on the question of erecting a new school building or not. The "text book" question was settled in the negative very quickly by an almost unanimous vote. After deciding on a three-thousand dollar building, a vote was taken and at the close of the polls the count showed the "yes" has 56 and the "no" had 20. Considerable discussion being made owing to the tale that someone juggled the clock 20 minutes or so ahead, and that some people who came before 11 o'clock, found the polls closed.

Berlin dispatches, from a well-informed source, say that Emperor William's visit to Turkey led to an agreement by which Germany undertakes to support the integrity of the sultan's Asiatic possessions, for which Germany will receive commercial and industrial privileges. It is believed this agreement is tantamount to an armed alliance between the two countries.

It is reported that Spain's exhaustive argument against the cession of the Philippines to the United States has had the result of making officials at Washington in a diplomatic mood, and to be like the islands.

The Russian government contemplates constructing a great ship used to connect the Baltic and the Black seas, and the gulf coast of the Caspian.

German newspapers comment most unfavorably upon the demands of the U. S. for the whole of the Philippines and some of them hint strongly that Germany must interfere.

DUMB-BELL

I'd like to think, at least, that I was clever as the average guy—I'd like to think my noodle, say, was pretty well equipped. But I am forced herewith, to tell (And I am pained and grieved, as well) That auction bridge—confound it!—Seems to have the soundly whipped.

Now I can write a rhyme or two, A thing not everyone can do, And I think I'm pretty handy At takin' things apart. I've often fixed the phonograph, And I can make the baby laugh, But at Auction, I am fearful— I am anything but smart!

I'm very good at fixin' tires, As well as startin' furnace fires, The both of which, I'm certain, You'll agree require some skill. I can also mow the grass, But with Auction Bridge,—alas!— I have not become so skillful, And I fear I never will.

Now I have played with lots of guys, I know, durn well, are none too wise, Except at playin' Auction, Where they're all too smart for me. And right away they start to grin When they behold me "sittin' in." As they lick their chops with gusto At the fun that's soon to be.

I'm sure they're nothin' else but dubs, But yet, by golly, with their clubs And hearts and spades and diamonds, They'd put Solomon to shame! But I don't care that I'm a hum At Auction Bridge—or that I'm dumb, For I'm only one of many— Other dumb-bells, I could name!

Anonymous Nonsense

A young lady operator recently attended a watch-night service and fell asleep during the sermon. At the close the preacher said, "We will now sing three forty-one—three forty-one—three forty-one—three forty-one."

The young lady, just waking up in time to hear the number, yawned and said, "The line is 'three forty-one'."

Mrs. Higgins was an incurable grumbler. She grumbled at everything that ever happened to her. But at last the vicar thought he had found something about which she could make no complaint; said the lady's drop of potatoes was certainly the finest for miles around.

"Once you must be well pleased," he said, beaming with a smile, as he put her in the village square. "Your potatoes are this year."

The old lady glowered at him as he answered: "They're not for the pick."

An Irish soldier had lost an eye in battle, but was allowed to continue in the service on condition that he have a glass eye in its place. One day, however, he appeared on parade without his artificial eye.

"Nolan," said the officer, "you are not properly dressed. Why is your artificial eye not in its place?"

"Sure," replied Nolan, "I left it in me box to keep an eye on me kit while I'm on parade."

To meet every situation which arises and to do it in a diplomatic language, is only the gift of the elect.

"Water," being one of two dried eggs, was not to be confused with the word "water," said a traveler in a city of the Middle West.

"Hiring me no name," said his friend, "but eliminate the name."

"Yes," said the waiter. "In this case, I am sorry to hear of the talk, and whispering."

"We," he had said, just before we opened the morning, and the "and" of the limitator got busted off. Will you take your eggs friend, same as the "are contents."

A little boy was on his knees, one eye closed, and his hands clasped in prayer, when he said to himself, "It is a pleasure," he said to him, afterward, "to see you so happy in your prayers so well. You speak so earnestly and seriously, and mean what you say, and care about it."

"Ah," he answered, "Ah, but auntie, you should hear me gargle."

A small demure, young lieutenant was reviewing his company, which, as luck would have it, was made up of hard-boiled men. Suddenly a voice called out from the group, "The little child shall lead us." The lieutenant, who had just said, "The little child shall lead us," said, "The little child shall lead us."

That afternoon he posted an order on the bulletin in the barracks which read: "Company will be in readiness tomorrow morning at 5 o'clock for a twenty-mile hike, and a little child shall lead you on a dawn big horse."

"May I ask the cause of all this excitement?" asked the stranger in the line.

"Certainly," replied the countryman, "We're celebrating the birthday of the oldest inhabitant, sir. She's a hundred and one today."

"Indeed! And may I ask who is that little man with the dreadfully sad countenance, walking by the old lady's side?"

"Oh, that's the old lady's son-in-law, sir. He's been keeping up the payments on her life-insurance for the last thirty years!"

"You say that you wish some name engraved on this ring?" said the jeweler to the bashful young man.

"Yes, I want the words 'George, to my dearest Alice, engraved on the inside of the ring.'"

"Is the young lady your sister?"

"No, she is the young lady to whom I am engaged."

"Well, if I were you, I would not have 'George, to my dearest Alice' engraved on the ring. The facts are, you are using the ring half a dozen times, I have had experience in such matters myself."

A Scottish soldier, badly wounded, requested an army chaplain to write a letter for him to his wife. The chaplain, anxious to oblige, started off with "My dear wife—"

"No, no," said the Scot, "Alma, put that down. Ma wife canna see a joke."

Here's a new one on Irvin Cobb. He might tell it on himself—but he probably won't. The facts are, he was invited by Louis J. Alder of Cleveland who was in attendance at Cobb's bedside when the latter was gravely ill at the Copley-Plaza Hotel in Boston last winter. Cobb had just started out on his lecture tour.

Alber, his manager, was in Boston at the time. After the crisis had passed Alber asked him how he was feeling one morning.

"Fair enough, physically," responded the celebrated humorist, "even though I confess I'm not much of a humorist."

"There's one thing that's worrying me, however," they've been shooting a lot of sermons at me. They tell me it's from rabbits. Honest, Alber, I don't know just what I'd do if a force or would come into my bedroom."

William Jennings Bryan was recently importuned by an enterprising lecturer-manager to engage in joint debate with D. S. Parkes Cadman, the eminent Brooklyn clergyman, on the subject of Darwinism or the Theory of Evolution. "I'll not debate this subject with anyone," said Bryan, "be he clergyman or layman, unless he first signs a statement to the effect that he believes he descended from a monkey."

Cadman was told of Bryan's decision. "That's easy," replied the clergyman, "I'll sign anything that I believe I descended from two monkeys."

Even more, "I'll sign one such statement for myself and one for Bryan!" Other conditions raised by the Commissioner made the debate impossible.
