The Indissoluble Bond

BY Samuel Hopkins Adams

SPEAKING OF SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS

Samuel Hopkins Adams is one of the few American authors who does not come from the West. He was born in New York state, and can trace his ancestry back to two generations of the illustrious Hopkings.

His married writing while still in college, and when he graduated he immediately took the rank of a journalist in Park Row. For ten years he was on the New York Times, during that period his stories were appearing in every big magazine in the country.

He is now writing for the Saturday Evening Post, and his stories are appearing in every big magazine in the country.

get away from it. Never! Not if I married Chester a hundred times. Was he there at the church? "Yes," said the minister. Chester Lipscomb, not in that tone! I appreciated that and answered, before I could catch myself: "Yes."

A swift radiance intensified the loveliness of the bride's face. "Oh, Vix! Did you send me a message?" "Suddenly I felt that for our wedding party; I knew from that moment it was a hopeless case. I also felt that I was a put-up job, I accused her. "Don't you think it's pretty raw to me?"

"Where is he, Vix?" "At the home," said the minister. "What are you going to do about it?" "Send for him." "To come here? The family will love that. They aren't speaking to me anyway. Can you blame them?"

"You're a dear," was the angular interpretation she put upon this. "I want you to go and see him." "I don't even know his infernal name." "Calvin Bennett." "Norrie thought it over, not being wholly beyond reason—yet. "Vix, will you be very good to me?"

"I will, yesterday." Her parents were the first to be overruled. "This world," I reflected aloud. "Well, what an I here for?" "The most blessedly sane thing that ever happened to me."

the deserted village from the world of actualities than the spell of peace enfolded her. Through the doorway of the service she saw the face of the priest, half hypnotized, his face at once placid and dreamy, vividly impressed in the dappled movement of shadows.

"After what we have been to each other?" "That was our sin. Oh, Calvin, why did you not write to me?" "I wrote. My messenger died on the way." "That was our punishment, and the woman-voice fearfully. "You must go, Calvin."

"I will go. But I hold you through time and eternity, yours is the true marriage. I will return to claim you, though it were a thousand years. I bind you to wait for me."

THE CONQUEST OF PERU

By ROGER POOCK

A. D. 1532

Pizarro was reared for a soldier; long years of soldiering made him no more than a captain, and when at the age of fifty he was ordered to discover nothing but failure.

For seven years he had his followers marching on trails beset by snakes and alligators, the fewest Indians were killed by man-eating savages, to be thrown at last battered, ragged and starving into the sea.
