BIG TELESCOPE FOR RUSSIA
Instrument Manufactured in British Factory Weighs 15 tons and is 45 Feet Long.

In view of the present condition of Russia, it is rather surprising to find that the Soviet government has ordered a telescope which is one of the largest in the world. This telescope has just been completed in a British factory, and will shortly be transported to an observatory on the shores of the Black sea. It weighs about nine tons, and the inside length of the tube is 45 feet. Heavy as the telescope is, it is so admirably fitted that it can be moved by electrical means as easily as if it were a small portable apparatus. The push-button system of control has been adopted, so that all the operator has to do to direct the telescope to any part of the heavens is to press certain buttons. A second telescope, almost as large as this, is being made at the same British factory for another observatory in Russia. So delicate is the work on these giant instruments that about three years are occupied in designing and constructing them.

Secrecy impossible.
"Do you believe in secret diplomacy?"
"No, sir," replied Mr. Meekton: "It is not practical. To like to see 'em keep anything from Herr Hitler, if it makes up her mind to find out just what they're talking about."

CHAPTER XVII—Continued.

"An' I'll be you a million pesos that if you got goin' on, an' she seen you 'er I've seen you—wait, I know what she'd think of you. This old world ain't changed none. Some women may be white-skinned an' soft-eyed an' sweet-voiced an' high-souled, but they all think of you. Gen's here's your game. Let Don Carlos come along. Be evil if he an' his gang are hungry, feed 'em. Take even a little overbearing Greaser talk. Be blind if he wants his gang to steal something. Let him think the women had moved down to the ranch. But if he asks you to jump—if he as much as looks round at the women—jest jump him same as you jumped Pat Howe. Me an' Monty'll hang back for that. An' if your strong bluff don't go through, if the Dads gang even thinks of flashin' guns, then we'll open up. An' all I got to say is if them greasers stand for real gun play they'll be sure I'll ever see 'em."

"Nels, there are white men in that gang," said Stewart.
"There. But use an' Monty'll be thinkin' of that. If they start, anything'll be to be shure quick."

"All right, Nels, old friend, and these rebel Stewarts," said Monty.
Nels returned to the campfire, and Stewart resumed his silent guard.

Madeline's guests sat talking in low voices until a late hour. The incident now began to take on the nature of a game.

others waited, showing by their ill-concealed expectancy the nature of their thoughts.

It was the demeanor of Stewart and his comrades that puzzled Madeline. They felt a restlessness or even particular disgust. Don Carlos had been covertly watching them, now made his scrutiny open, even aggressive. The guerrillas, indeed, seemed undecided, but not in any sense unprepared. In her growing excitement Madeline had not clearly heard Ambrose's soft whispers and she made an effort to distract some of her attention from those quality to the cowboy crouching beside her.

"I hear horses. The guerrillas are coming."

"Don't be mad if suddenly I clap my hands over your eyes, Miss Hammond," he was saying. "Some of us have been here. I never seen Gen so cool. That's a dangerous sign in him, and look, see how the boys are working together. Oh, it's show it's sure not accident. That fox Greaser knows how to handle his men. If they are wise they haven't seen enough to care. The Don, though—" premise, who realized how fortunate had favored her, and what pest still hung in the balance, Stewart swung aside his big, black, mirrored rim, and he walked. At the white's majesty justice, and with a center followed Stewart's slight break. Madeline got out of the already up and down, heavy breathing rite. Then the pines hid her view.

"Once in the trail, Stewart's horse broke a shambles. Madeline changed his gait and led the black's horse. Stewart called back a warning. The low, wide-spreading branches of trees might break Madeline out of the night. Fast riding through the trees, she crooked, obstructed trail called forth all her alertness."
