GOOD HIGHWAYS STAY GOOD BY CONSTANT CARE

A man who spent twenty-five thousand dollars for a house and contents and refused to spend a hundred dollars to stop the leak in the roof, which spoiled both, would be considered a fool. But there are many counties and many States which spend from ten to twent-five thousand dollars a mile for a good road, and refuse the hundred dollars a year needed to keep it in perfect order.

The time to begin to repair a good road is the day it is opened for traffic. Homely philosophy says that a stitch in time saves nine, and road experience proves that a bucket of oil, a little sand, a few rocks, and a man with a shovel now can save the expense of a whole road gang and expensive machinery later.

The modern road consists of a foundation course of a stone, a smaller lighter course on top, a wearing course of still smaller stones, a binder of oil and sand, and perhaps a top dressing of the same. As long as the structure is complete, the road will wear. But let time, or a too heavy load, or frost, or some other cause, dig a hole through the wearing course into the foundation, and the "bad spot" will begin to "travel." Stones will break away and roll down in the ditch, the surface will disintegrate and in a comparatively short time a large and rough hole appears.

A good road is no better than its worst mile. A mile of holes and ruts cuts down the usefulness of ten miles of good road. To repair a large hole costs much money. To inspect the road often and stop up the little hole when it starts is very inexpensive. The greatest city fire in history could have been put out by a child with a cup of water if found in time. So can the worst possible damage to roads be inexpensively prevented, if the maintenance is begun in time.

Good Ship "Mayflower" With Its Crew, Sees All The Sights

3000 Miles In 24-Day Trip To California Includes Many Experiences

(By Albert Peters)

By motor from Birmingham to Imperial Beach, California, a distance of roughly 3,000 miles in twenty-four days, was the record of Mortimer A. Neff of West Maple Ave. who returned from his long trip Tuesday of last week.

Mr. Neff, accompanied by his cousin, Miss Catherine Bigelow, left Birmingham on the morning of June 28th. Driving a Packard twin-six, fancifully dubbed "The Mayflower," the two reached Chicago, where Miss Ann Whittlesey joined the party. From there on, the lengthy journey was made without serious mishap, although many interesting incidents occured. Mountain climbing, bathing in Salt Lake, and badger, rabbit, and owl shooting were among the party's numerous diversions, all of which humorously have been recorded in "The Log of the Mayflower," kept by Mr. Neff.

Two hundred and forty-eight miles were covered the first day. Michigan City, Ind., was the first overnight stop. Chicago was made the next night, and the third night found the party at Marshaltown, Iowa. From the Log: "The terrain was in no way mortorious to the eye; the Iowa cornfields were beautiful. Many of them are laid out on rolling hillsides, and the small shadows cast by fleeting clouds were very artistic from a distance of a mile or more. The weather remains perfect for touring. Very little pavement has been struck in the last two days the hard dirt or gravel roads are, for the most part, in good condition." On the fourth night, after having traveled nine hundred miles the company arrived at Omaha.

In Nebraska, poorer roads were found. The Mayflower "hove in sight of a long range of young mountains." At Ogallala. "We have it impressed upon us that we are now 'out west'," says Mr. Neff in his notes. "Buffalo Bill used to tear thru here before Henry Ford started things going."

The first really troublesome incident, outside of slight tire trouble, was the leaking of an oil-drum which was being used as a reserve gas tank. Coats, sweaters, rugs, blankets and other articles were generously drenched, but the Captain "optimistically notes that what moths there were in the baggage undoubtedly perished. On the same day, a cloudburst was encountered. Before the storm, "the road blew up around the car and in it, caused by a pleasant little wind that would have brought Columbus across in four days flat." And later: "Poor Old Abe Lincoln should have seen his highway after the show was over."

At Elk Mountain—"where the misquitos come out of cocoons and have a wing-spread of eight inches" —it was suggested that an ascension be attempted. "The two women says ah yes it would be grand etc." So all three climbed. Mr. Neff's sentiments regarding mountain climbing are forceably expressed in The Log: "The next time I climb a mountain it will be because of either of these two reasons: (1st.) Because there is a flock of bears with a good appetite chasing me, or (2nd) Because I have busted out of a insane asylum—What we want is a altitude of about 1 foot and either level or down hill both ways."

On the eleventh day of the trip, the party passed through Wyoming. Treacherous roads of red clay were encountered, and progress was much slower. Salt Lake City was the next stop. "We change our clothes, and after some confusion, recognized each other and got together again. . . . We patronized two theatres. They enjoyed me. Mr. Waring's Penn State boys helped things along—popular even way out here." A swim in the Great Salt Lake was next in order.

Gold Hill, Utah, was reached at 2:00 a. m. and the hotel was found to be full. Sleeping in the car proved to be very unsuccessful, and daylight was welcomed with cries of thanksgiving.

Austin, Nevada, was passed, and the mud flats leading to Reno traversed in safety. The Mayflower, which long since had become "bedolled with desert memories," groaned over the "See-there-a Mountains," and the Log records that the "road was built to look pretty from an airplane and had 47 double-barreled curves to the square mile." Later: "By this time, Prisco is as far from our minds as suicide." However, Berkley, California, was reached the next day, and from there it was but a step to San Francisco. The travelers had put approximately 3000 solid miles between them and home.

Brief stops were made at Santa Barbara and Los Angeles, where swimming was indulged in, and movie stars and universities were appraised.

On July 21st, the weather-beaten Mayflower entered port amid heartfelt cheers of the voyagers. Imperial Beach, nine miles south of San Diego was the destination, and the weary traveller accepted the hospitality of Col. M. O. Bigelow, Mr. Neff's uncle. Mortimer Neff remaind there all summer, leaving for home two weeks ago, as he expected to take up his studies as a sophomore at the University of Michigan.

Fall Planting of Evergreens

(By Ralph L. Coryell)

At this time of year most plants should have completed their yearly growth. In the case of the evergreens and perennials it is a good time for transplanting.

There is some difference of opinion in the matter of fall planting of evergreens. It is the opinion of some that August is the best time, whereas others claim that better results may be obtained in September and even October. Best experience requires that we follow the weather. If we are favored with an early growing season with sufficient rainfall the evergreens should be in a thorly growing season with sufficient rainfall the evergreens should be in a thorly ripened condition by the middle or latter part of August. In that case it would be safe and proper to plant immediately after a good rain.

The history of our weather cycles show us, however, that in many cases our seasons happen just like this year. There is a certain amount of rain in the spring, but during the summer growing season there is not enough rain to stimulate fully the growth of plants. The growth is prolonged to a later period and consequently the wood is not ripened until September. Again we have very often a hot period in September and evergreens planted in August must necessarily be watched very closely and watered often.

The advantage of planting in early fall is that the plants are encouraged to throw out rootlets and thus establish the plants in time for the winter. In planting too late the roots are not fully established and the plants are apt to dry out in the winter by reason of the constant evaporation from the top and insufficient intake from the roots.

There are certain varieties of evergreens which are safer to plant in the spring than in the fall. In this class is the Juniper family, whose root system is not as fibrous as that of other sorts. Then there is the deciduous conifer, Larch, which should be planted in early spring. All other varieties of evergreens can be handled very nicely in the fall.

Soon we will discuss the methods of planting evergreens.
