Mothers, my plea today is for your growing girls. I do not mean your tiny tots, for they are growing too, but for your girls just growing into the eventful times of their lives, from girlhood to womanhood, when she must make her way as an individual, apart from the comfort and seclusion of home.

We expect all this of you because your training of your children, all else would count as nothing. Be- quired of you. By the way you fit into the laws of love, and the fear of a future wife and Mother, ready to teach them the laws of the land when they reach maturity?

Tomorrow afternoon at a reception to be held at her home "Why-sall," Bloomfield Hills, from three to six in the afternoon, Miss Frances Shaw will make her formal bow to the guests being from Detroit, Cross Pointe, Bloomfield Hills and Birmingham. Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Acheson left for Cambridge Springs, Pa. They are now at home at the C. M. Tinsman residence at 223 Fernside avenue.

I often ponder as I look at a Mother and daughter, does a Mother see herself reproduced over again in her girls. How like she is to the Mother in her ways, in her speech, and more in her looks. This to a Mother must be the most wonderful part of motherhood, and as you see yourselves once more in a younger edition, the power that is within you must urge you to make of your girl an example to all she comes in con- tact with. Teach her the art of self- possession, so when she must take a position in life for the first time she is not awkward and self-conscious. This makes the difference between success and failure. By her posses- sion of this great gift, she is enabled not only as mentally and physically fit, but is consequently a help to others in moulding their characters also. This will power of her which you have taught her to control is really the central force of character, and enables her to accomplish the things in life which count. And each day as she toils and performs the tasks of times distasteful to her—which come to her lot, she strengthens this will power, and she is not in the gaining the quality known as Per- sonality. To possess a pleasing per- sonality, you must be well developed, give to her power and expression, and so with these helps she is fitted to take the highest place in life.

It would seem that a Mother so expected to know and perform so many different tasks, but it is to you we look to have these things come to pass. I wish I could tell you all you mean to this great country. You are Pal.

There will be a special church service for the community in the 6-o'clock Theatre at Cranbrook, Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. Everyone is cordially invited. This will be a special harvest thanksgiving. An offer- ing will be taken for the Red Cross Fund for the Japanese sufferers.

Franklin News

Mrs. Lynn Everett and Roy Everett are both very sick with typhoid fever. Mrs. Willis is here helping to care for her daughter.

The people of the community are glad to know that Rev. Carley will stay with the Franklin-Southfield charge another year. James Bowden is home on his vacation.

One might go far to find a better picture than "The Old Homestead," which was shown at the M. E. church Saturday evening, Sept. 22. It is a work of art, wholesome, humorous and pathetic in turn, and a far greater thing than the old play which held the stage for forty years.

Little Virginia Nichols is very much improved and will soon be well again.

The struggle goes on, the stone rebounds and hits the Mother in such a crisis, because she has not in the early days of her girl's training, given to her the great art of self- possession.

Give to them the courage of self- possession and self confidence, and teach them to have faith in you, in themselves, and in their possibilities to win all things.

Make the greatest effort to be to them always from their earliest recollections, the Best of Mothers, the best of friends, and always a friend to win all things.
