

Two and Two Make Four, But—
We are constantly reminded of George Eliot's natchy formulation of Lecky's attitude: That two and two certainly make four, but that a gentle man will not press the matter too far.

Dramatizing a dime! Making a small, thin coin of the denomination of ten cents so important that the hero, the heroine, the villain and the remainder of the living characters in a photoplay are for the moment forgotten, while interest centers on the shiny bit of silver.

Such a situation arises in Mr. Billings Spends His Dime, a Paramount picture comedy starring Walter Hiers which will be on view at the Baldwin Friday, Saturday, Royal Oak, next Thursday and Friday. As a clerk in a store, Hiers, known in the picture as Billings, earns twenty dollars a week. He saves nothing. As a consequence, he is fired by a jealous boss who is in love with a girl who adores Walter. He finds himself with a lone dime alone in a cold world.

What to do with it? Food, naturally, is the first thought. Drink, perhaps, in the second. But does Billings make use of his dime for food or drink? Not at all. He buys a cigar with it!

But before he spends the coin there is a lot of fun. Those who see the picture will admit that the dime is so important that it absolutely hogs every scene in which it takes part.
Through the spending of the dime, Billings becomes involved in a South American revolution, wins himself a beautiful girl and has the time of his life. Jacqueline Logan is featured as leading woman and heads an unusually capable supporting cast of players. The comedy is a chaser of the blues of the finest grade and should attract general attention here as elsewhere.
