Snappy Story About A Snaps Turtle That Came Down In The Rain

By Phyllis Myers. Everyone remembers the rain last Saturday night. It came in sheets, in torrents, in buckets. Every living creature was driven to find shelter. Streets were deserted, and customers' good stores were gazing out. With every flash of lightning or clap of thunder...

There had come from the green sea a snappy turtle who had always belonged to it. It must have fallen from the sky—everybody said so. At any rate it did not seem to be an office. Mr. Turtle rushed madly about, upsetting things...

Snuggled away in the southeast corner of the back storeroom was a wooden canny maid. Near it was a shelf such as is sometimes used on farms...

The rain had stopped, the severity of the turtle's action were wearing off and the grim problem of finding a home for the snappy turtle must be rushed off to the green spaces—but how? But a few minutes later he was headed toward the woods and safety...
