WOODWARD AVENUE, MICHIGAN'S "MAIN STREET," HAS HAD MANY NAMES

Though Woodward avenue has borne its name continuously over 100 years, historians tell us that the citizens of old Detroit were actively in the selection of a name for Detroit's "Main Street" and that it has been known by as many as six names. After the fire of 1805, which destroyed the main street, the city was designated as "Court House" because it was planned to be located in the center of Grand Circus park. In the final plans of the governors and judges in 1818, it was changed to Woodward avenue, in honor of one of the judges and author of the plan.
