John Hanna, of Ann Arbor, formerly of Birmingham, Mr. Hanna even now continues to spend a part of his time here. I have been hearing a little bit about the suggested alteration to the village charter. It isn't alteration they want to change the charter. The first thing that should be done to it is to have it burned and then a fresh start made. Another thing, Birmingham should have more than three commissioners. I am not very fond of the communal form of government but it must have it. I say have five or even seven commissioners. Now that this discussion has been started about the charter, my idea is to start out fresh with a brand new charter that is up with the times and a larger commission to take care of the affairs that are sure to come as the village grows.

Walter S. Ryan, of Ravine Road, had occasion to call the fire department Friday night when he discovered his house on fire. He called after two o'clock Friday night when he had to call the fire department and expected to get a large bill. It was expected that he would ordinarily be expected at night, with a volunteer fire department. However, the fire department, at the alacrity of the men in arriving, and their excellent work. Our neighbors also were lovely when they routed them out at that hour in the morning. You have to meet an emergency of this nature. You know the sort of village you live in.

streets through Birmingham. If the state intends to put through one street 204 feet wide, provisions for the elimination of grade crossings should be made. A 204-foot street through any town carrying a large amount of traffic through any town is hazardous, and everything possible should be done to make for safety in crossing it. Knox Poppleton, East Maple avenue: "I believe that the village should pass an ordinance which will prevent anyone from building a garage on a part of the house. A garage built into a house certainly increases the fire hazard, shuts out light, and does not add to the health of the occupants."
