

Mary Pickford in "Mary Pickford in Vernon Haddon Hall" Friday Night, April 3, 1925

Mary Pickford never so supremely beautiful. Never so splendid a portrayal as that of the vixenish miss of eighteen who braves parental wrath, faces treachery, intrigue, and even treason, to wed her heart's choice. Beauty marks every phase of this classic.

Peep-peep-peep! The male corner they rejoiced. The content began dragging out the golf clubs and fishing tackle for at least a preliminary inspection. Fair eyes began looking over the last season's fiery with an eye to blooming out in something but so different. And how they bloomed—in blue and crimson and green—but the cold breezes nipped them cruelly through lightweight coats and suits. Scornfully they looked at early robins huddled chattering in the trees and put the springtime regalia back on the hanger. "Peep-peep-peep!" came from the busy part of the post-office. What could it be? "What's that," asked someone of Jim Cobb, postmaster. "Oh, that," he said, "that's baby chicks being shipped through the mail to prospective poultry farmers; and if anyone should ask me it's about the surest sign of spring I know of."

Man finally gave up hope and grudgingly conceded that after all golf and fishing in March could be only in imagination of any save the lucky few who wintered in the south. Still a bit of cold weather didn't freeze up any of the ardor of the optimist for spring. With all his winter togs he still looked diligently for signs of the "hoped for time." Soft spots in the road where the car lurched down in the deeps and back were welcomed with joy. Soon the frost would be out of the ground for planting and green grass would begin to grow. But the weather continued temperamental and even the most helpful turned skeptical. Then, one day this week, a nice warm day, an optimist or two went into the frost which for the mid-afternoon sun had dried up all the wet from the sidewalks, and even the slinky, slippery place at the post office door. It was warm and balmy, a lot of folks had a tinge of spring fever, but what proof was that?

Sworn and subscribed to township clerk GRACE CAREY HOWARD, Notary Public in and for the County of Oakland. My commission expires Aug. 24, 1925.
