He will visit the fire district first which is bounded on the north by Wilshire and Hamilton streets, on the south by Hazel street, and extends east and west on Maple avenue for a few blocks. These limits will include the business section. The inspection may extend to other parts of the village on account of the several recent fires caused by oil burners. There is now a law in force which demands a permit from the state before an oil burner can be installed and an inspection follow its installation by a district inspector. FARMINGTON FIGHTS STATE'S ATTEMPT TO RE-LOCATE HIGHWAY last week and testified he and his father and mother are substantially interested in a large acreage through which the proposed cut off for the Grand River road would pass in the event it is re-located. Plans showed the state had approved the straightening of state trunk line so it would pass a mile south of Farmington village, swinging around rough property that is now largely undeveloped and cutting in two the substantial country estate of C. F. Smith, Detroit grocer.

The new road would tend to develop the newly platted property and increase its value but would dislocate a large amount of traffic that now passes through Farmington. It was shown that the actual difference in distance between the old route and new .400 feet in favor of the proposed route.
Citizens Back Board
Farmington citizens are opposed to the re-location of the highway through the town by C. F. Smith is also opposed to permitting the road to be cut through the town. The members of the township board say they do not object to a street being placed half a mile south of their village but they object to it being called Grand River road or M-16.
