DANCE OF THE FLOWERS

The sun shone brightly. Said the flow'rs, "Come, let us have a dance. The day is wonderful, yet we Its beauty can enhance. Come, let us don our brightest gowns, When bathed in morning dew. We must be gay on such a day.

With sky so fair and blue."

Then, garbed in silk and velvet gowns
Of every lovely shade,
They swayed and fluttered in the breeze
That cooled the woodland glade.
A daisy with a buttercup,
A violet with a rose,
The party led. Some poppies red
Danced with some golden-glows.

A spray of dusty goldenrod, Some stately hollyhocks, And hosts of other flow're were there, All in their finest frocks.

The birds in concert sat to sing.
The busy bees came nigh.
A friendly show'r called for an hour.
A rainbow arched the sky.

At sundown, wearily each flow'r Began to droop her head.
"Farewell until another dawn, We're very tired." they said. Then carefully they folded up Their gowns so gay and bright, And went to sleep, while stars did keep Their watch 'till morning light.
