Build Your Home of "Poured Concrete"

YOU can have a fireproof home now, without building it of expensive brick. A new method, known as the Strom System, makes it possible to build the walls of "poured concrete"—at a substantial saving, as compared with solid brick or veneer construction.

Houses of any type can be built by the Strom System—large two-story homes as well as small homes and cottages. The walls can be built of any thickness desired and, as they are double with an air space between them, they assure coolness in summer and warmth in winter.

Send coupon for complete information about this new method of building construction, together with list of locations in and about Pontiac where Strom All-Crete homes have already been erected.
