Old Dobbin Is Gone--Now It Looks As Though The Auto Is Doomed

By Helen V. Walker
"Oh phaw, this silly business of racing around without horses. They all kill themselves but they likely deserve it," is about what our grandfathers said when they heard of the first Michigan counties organizing automobile clubs for the welfare of drivers or for the promotion of commercial autoists. We are now put in the similar positions with our grandsons.
Our provocation is a bit more modern, but it all amounts to the same thing. Our grandfathers were about to have the rights of their horses usurped by the horseless carriage. We are about to have our modern day horseless carriages usurped by the aeroplane. Prospective members met last Friday night in Lansing to form what will be termed the Commercial Aviators' Association of Michigan. This little meeting and organization can not be viewed in the light of the village. Two of Birmingham's own youthful in a group were Harry Brooks, whose name has long been closely associated with aeronautics, were on the program as a speaker. Milton Berz is the flyer from Birmingham who is expected to attend.

This is not to be considered in the light of an unassuming little organization that was formed last week, either. Their plan for establishing a Michigan organization is for the promotion of air meets in Michigan, the establishment of flying fields, air mail service for the state, and an united airway system of Michigan.
The meeting and dinner was arranged by Lansing Chapter of the National Aeronautic Association of America and was held in the Elks Temple in Lansing. Invitations have been issued to all Michigan aeroplane owners and commercial aviators. Harry Brooks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Brooks, west of Birmingham, left America, Ga., early last week by aeroplane and expected to arrive in Lansing in time for an address Friday night. Milton Berz went over from Birmingham to attend the meeting. Mr. Berz received his training as a flyer under Brooks.

Volks" was published in 1917, with a good sale.
During war time, a khaki bound edition of "A Heap of Livin'" was issued, it then a special war time volume "Over Here," dealing with the folks at home and their interest in the boys "over there." Other books have been issued, one of the latest being "When Day is Done," published 1921.
Edgar A. Guest, or "Eddie" as he is known to many intimate friends, is known to many intimate friends from his penmanship of his choicest verses. He has collaborated a number of prose writings to the American Magazine of late, most of them of a somewhat personal nature, all very interesting. He has been often heard as a public speaker in the delivery of his own poems.
All over the United States his poems are appearing daily in copyrighted form so it is not necessary that even an extract from them be printed here. Everyone interested in humane kind reads and enjoys them. Filled with the best of logic they are doing a big part toward making the world a happier place in which to live.

A COMPLETE PRINTING SERVICE

Going on the theory that "A person doesn't need to be so much as to be reminded of it." Eccentric in this paragraph attempt to remind you of our services to you—we are our Printing Department.
We have shown many through our Printing Department, and they have seen over the completeness of printing equipment, so that they "didn't think" as small as Birmingham such a modern newspaper commercial printing plant. Now, too, we extend a cordial invitation to come into our office and look it over.
Two modern Linotype used in our office to insure certain type for use in assuring you of quick and a neatness of type cannot be done by the least in "hand set".
Presses and one cylinder together with all the life of the early day press were of the type. But the present day indications is most widely used are such as are actually living the same life as their fellow men.
Guest is of this type: a man who has spent many years as a newspaperman, has lived the life of the common people, and understands the joys and sorrows of those about him through having passed through similar experiences himself. That is why his poems are read today so widely throughout the nation and even its borders.
His first real work was done in a newspaper office. We say this even with a realization that he worked for a time at a soda fountain in a store, for he left that just as soon as he could get a position in the office of the Detroit Free Press, which was in fact, instead of the time he had to provide for the aid of his brother Harry, who owned a little printing equipment, enough to set up eight pages of poems at a time, which could be locked into a form and carried to local printers for the presswork to be done. Of this book, called "Home Rhymes," 300 copies were issued. This was in 1910, and after two years had passed about twice the number of copies of "Just Glad Things" were published in such the same manner as the first book. Detroit: Robinson, who had become interested with his style, handled the publishing of his next volume, "Breakfast Table Chat," and then in 1918 an honest-to-goodness publisher in Chicago printed several editions, a total of 50,000 copies, of "A Heap of Livin'." Where Two Rivers meet

At Kharoom, the capital of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, the two rivers, the White and the Blue, meet. The water of the one river is of a greenish-gray color; that of the other is clear and blue, except when it floods, when it gains a chocolate brown from its alluvial burden.
Gathering Diamonds
The fact that diamonds being to lubricating, used by water, white pebbles and semi-precious stones roll off, has been made the basis for a new machine called the "separator," which picks diamonds out of materials in which they cannot be seen by human eyes.—Popular Science Monthly.
