PRESCHOOL CHILD IS SPECTER OF ADOLESCENT

Miss Cleveland Of Detroit Talks At Meeting Of Women

AUSPICES OF A. A. U. W.

A well known authority on the subject of the pre-school child, Miss Elizabeth Cleveland of the Detroit Board of Health, spoke before a large and much interested group of women at a meeting held under the auspices of the American Association of University Women last Wednesday afternoon in the Community House.

Miss Cleveland began her talk with an account of some of the fundamental assumptions on pre-school training that exist today. First, there is the conviction held by the child psychologist to the parent, but from the time he enters school at the age of five he begins to be molded by the school and the word, to the state. This is a legal assumption. The rights of the state have increased as the age of the child below five years. Second, because there has been little improvement in the methods of instruction has met with great prejudice in the past and still is meeting with opposition to that of the child.

When the idea of the Merrill-Palmer school was being formulated three-fourths of the pre-school children were opposed to pre-school training. Even now, high school graduates adjust their preconceived ideas to the sight of tiny tots dressing themselves in the school and on the playground. Third, the pre-school child is the most neglected of all small children in our country. There is no undivided attention of the mother or nurse and enlist the aid of the state.

There are about 60 children in the schools and there they improve physically, mentally, morally, and socially. Children come from the most inferior homes, and all the little pupils have grown 50 per cent more than government figures show. The child can get the beginnings of language, science, art, music, rhythm, and other things. The emotions can be trained scientifically and social adjustment can be made. A partial remedy for delinquency will be found, it is hoped, in this kind of education.
