ECCENTRICITIES

Being a few stray notions by some nations (when they meet) they are quite insane (when they don't).

"We never miss the sunshine until the shadows fall" is part of a song familiar to most people. To reverse the words and apply them to Birmingham's relation to its beautiful trees would read "We never miss the shadows until the sunshine falls." Every tree like a beautiful character has a place in our community.

When they gather here some time in June, undoubtedly members of various classes that attended the old Hill school prior to 1900 will enjoy a red-letter day in their lives. How odd it all is; as children we want to grow quickly into maturity—then we turn back to childhood days for the best memories. Isn't that sufficient reason why all parents should try to make their children's days happy?

Before the summer is past Birmingham will have a number of greatly improved streets. As a matter of fact, within the next few years Birmingham will, as far as outward appearance goes, resemble certain portions of any large city. It will have good streets and sidewalks, good schools and a public library; it will be free from industry. Will its houses be HOMEST? Will its children be happy? Will its citizens UNDERSTAND one another? Will it have developed a civic soul and then express it? If it does, then it will be different; it will be a fine and rare place in which to live.

Three hundred new houses are being built in Birmingham at the present time; as many more will be constructed before the next snow flies. This means something more than just so much building material that is being erected in our village. It means that 600 new families—each with its hopes, ambitions and ideals—will locate here. That means something to the world. Beautiful characters may flourish in Birmingham as well as flowers and vegetables—both require, however, human as well as divine sunshine.

As several hundred people slowly filed past the door of Warren I. Clizbe in the local First Presbyterian church a few weeks ago, many honest tears trickled down the faces of men and women. Although people are inclined to differ with the opinions of others, often getting into heated arguments about a question, there must be something fine in human hearts that does appreciate and appreciate the efforts of others. That was the case with Mr. Clizbe; stripped of shame and vanity by the violation of Deacons in our midst, we folks who comprise the population of Mother Earth manifest our love and forbearance for one another—we prove that the idealist's dreams about a brotherhood of man are possible for realization ultimately.

As though in keeping with the fact that the smoke from industry shall never hover over Birmingham, the three members of the local village commission are not equipped with chimneys, either. By this we simply mean that Charles J. Shan, Willie Bell, and David Lusk do not use tobacco in any form. Thus they provide excellent examples for all men—and some of the boys.

Much propaganda is being spread these days regarding prohibition, and the dry relative to prohibition in the United States. Personally, we favor a condition of temperance for all people, for we believe that intemperance is the bridge that connects man with the beasts. People who apply temperance to their daily lives must be motivated by altruistic desires; when the majority of citizens in the United States are thus motivated you may expect the prohibition law to be a success. Until then, we shall have the laws—but many violations of it. The Volstead Act, to be successful, must first find response in the hearts and minds of people before it is kept out of their stomachs.

Various newspaper stories to the effect that the late Luther Burbank was an infidel must be taken with a grain of salt. A man who spent his entire life in preparing material matter, as embodied in the identity of plants and flowers, so that this matter might be re-created in a different form, certainly must have had faith in God as revealed through Christianity. If it be true that Luther Burbank doubted in his mind the truth of Jesus' teachings, his life proves that he must have been out of his mind most of the time. He proved that flowers and plants may be grown without thistles and thorns, just as lives may be lived without despair and despondency.

Realizing that man has been known to stoop to all sorts of unfair, dishonest tactics all for the sake of gold or power—the people of the United States should be filled with grateful gratitude today. Calvin Coolidge is at the head of our government. Perhaps there are men who might do better as President of the United States—perhaps, it can not be denied, however, that most people do us worse. Undoubtedly Mr. Coolidge's coat-tails almost invariably will come through free and unfettered to the credit of his own soul, second, to the safety and well being of his country.

We wonder if Henry Ford ever has a longing for the "old days of the dinner pail." We asked this question of Senator Couzens recently and he replied, "Can't say that I do, for I have made it a practice never to look backwards."

Even at its worst, life is amusing if you have a sense of humor and a sound body.
