Folksburg Items

Our neighboring town of Brownsell is acting rather uppish since it had a picture of its court house and depot in the city papers. But we're not jealous. We've not got any court house, and a picture of our depot wouldn't overwhelm us with pride if it looked natural. But we've got more of 2200 people who feel more at ease in Folksburg than anywhere else.

Mrs. Pearl Bokamp, wife of the proprietor of the Ladies Fashion Shop, went to the city yesterday to select some new clothes for herself. Harley Burton invited several of the neighbors in Saturday night to hear his home-made radio set. But after working for two hours longer on it, he told those present that he guessed it was silent night, and he then offered some entertainment with his stereoscope views.

At its last meeting the Town Board voted to tear out the old iron hitching rack on Main Street, and to give more room for parking space. Alex Powers, who got his start several years ago as a horse trader, was opposed to the move at first on account of sentimental reasons. He said that he really had something to look forward to, were when he could go out on Saturday morning and find a whole block of good trading stock tied along that hitching rack. But he admitted that those times are gone, so he voted to abolish the rack.

Miss Gloria Blossom is down from the city for a week's visit with her aunt Hettie Blossom on Slaus avenue. Soon after her arrival, Miss Blossom appeared in a pair of knickers, and seemed considerably disappointed over the lack of interest manifested. It was later explained to her that the girls at the basket factory have been wearing overalls for two years now. Sandy Atkins, who ordered a slide trombone from a catalog house on a week's free trial, got discouraged after blowing the horn for three days, so he returned it Monday and asked for his dollar back. Several of the neighbors expressed relief over his decision.

Our remaining Civil War veterans took up a collection this week to buy old Cap Bowers another suit to replace the one he had ruined at the dancing mill. They all donated a dollar apiece except Uncle Bill Bobbit, who put in two dollars. He said he borrowed the extra dollar from old Cap in the winter of '92, and he'd better pay it back now, so as to keep up his reputation for promptness. Old Cap's voice sort of failed him when the boys took the money to him, but they joshed him along, and before they left he was trying to sing some of the old army songs.

Mr. Elmer Peek had a rather worrisome day last Thursday. She found a half of a postal card on the sidewalk, and it had some writing about something of urgent importance. But she couldn't tell what it was without the rest of the card. She carried her grocery basket up and down the street for an hour or two, looking for the other half. But she couldn't find it, and was considerably upset for the rest of the day.

The Star store has had bills struck advertising a big profit-sharing sale, with goods marked down one-third. Following this announcement, Frank Perle put up a notice in his store window across the street, saying he makes up little profit he can't share it with anybody and stay in business, but that for the time being he'll throw in a bar of soap with every dollar traded out with him.

As this set of items is being concluded, a considerable under-current of interest has been aroused by a new or less suspicious looking stranger who has been in town all day. Several have spoken about it on different things around, and Miss Sarah Riddle, who operates our millinery store, says she has seen him looking at the bank a good deal. Marshal Bailey is keeping the man under close surveillance, and means to question him if he's still here at dark.

Mr. and Mrs. W. DeVere Blackner of Watkins street will move to the city of this week into their new house on Frank street.
