Novel Economy Test Made by Oaklands

Eight Oakland Six cars—one model from each successive year since 1919, engaged in one of the strangest economy tests recorded in recent months when E. Knox Roberts of Portland, Ore., pitted each of these cars against the other.

In this unique test, both open and closed cars were used. Each was filled with a measured gallon of gasoline, started over the same route which embraced both an up and down grade, and was driven until the last drop of gas splattered, and the engine stopped. The oldest car was a 1920 model produced in 1919 and each successive year was represented by the Greater Oakland Six sedan carrying the banner for the 1927 Oakland line.
