NEVER UTTERED

Changes from the trail of an eccentric staff member's brain here and in no way connected with the persons whose names are prefixed.

Justice Floyd S. Buck: "It is difficult to tell just how fast a machine is traveling merely by counting the revolutions of the wheel. If one figures the amount of time it takes for contraction and expansion and heat and cold and so on, by course it is, as I said, pretty difficult to count the revolutions of a motor car as it speeds past."

James Bayley, township clerk: "Well, it is near Thanksgiving Day and the old respected poem about over the hills and to grandmother's house we go—that is not the one about little Red Riding Hood, although that's a good one too—I say because Thanksgiving Day is soon coming rather will soon be here, that poem about which see above, will be recalled again soon because of Thanksgiving Day. Whew!"

Lloyd McQuarters, 521 Watkins: "Many persons sing, 'O for the life of a fireman.' That is a song and many sing it. It is not opera. It is merely a song. All songs are not opera. Lessons are given on morthorgans. Lessons are not given on operas. That is, so far as I know. There must be logic in the world."

Charles R. Peck, merchant: "An Athenian said, 'All Athenians are liars.' Well, he was an Athenian, therefore, he was a liar. If he was a liar he lied when he said, 'All Athenians are liars.' I just thought I would say that because someone in the crowd mentioned logic."

Motorcycle Officer Clayton Stokes: "It is poetry to ride on these fall days, over the world's greatest highway, listening to the birds who have lost their way south, chirping cheerily despite their misfortune. And it is poetry to hear the leaves crack in the bonfires as they send their material offering skyward. I mean smoke. It is poetry, all this, in the fall. Yes, sir, poetry."

Lyle Philp, pressman at the Eccentric: "The other day I couldn't find my sweater so I looked all over the house and kept on looking and kept on looking and then still kept on looking. Then when I couldn't find it I asked my mother and she said, 'Why Lyle, you've got it on, so you see I found my sweater.'"

HOSPITAL OPENING SET FOR JANUARY

Tuberculosis Infirmary in Waterford Township Rapidly Nears Completion.

The new Oakland County Tuberculosis Hospital on Cooley Lake road, eight miles from Pontiac is speedily nearing completion. The hospital is located in Section 31 of Waterford Township.

Judging from present indications, the building will be ready for occupancy early in January. Lathers are finishing up this week and the plasterers will start work early next week.

The interior brick work has been completed and with the completion of the plastering, work will be rushed on the installation of trim and the decorating.

The Board of Supervisors recently approved an appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of equipment and when the building is opened it will be constructed and equipped with the very latest equipment for the care of tuberculosis patients.

Bee Culture Industry Old as History Recently Comes Into Its Own

Medina, O.—Bee culture, an industry as old as history itself, has been developed only within the last quarter century into one of the greatest farm activities in the United States and other countries.

It has built up a $100,000,000 industry in this country alone. It has engaged the interest of some 500,000 to 1,000,000 bee keepers who own an average of 10 colonies of bees each, and it has brought them a surplus of some 200,000 tons of honey this year.

This information is gathered from conversations with some of the leading bee-keepers of the country, assembled here to pay homage to two of their pioneers—Rev. L. J. Langstroth, who died 31 years ago, and A. I. Root, founder of the American bee industry, who died in 1923.

Langstroth is the man who invented the frame comb for handling the bees and this revolutionized the bee business. Root built up the industry into what it is today.

Helps Plants Grow
Now bees are cultivated not only for their honey but for their usefulness in cross-pollinating the plants from which they get their nectar. Clover and buckwheat fields have been stimulated immensely by their activities, and orchards are growing fuller crops.

According to Prof. E. F. Phillips of Cornell University, who was 19 years in charge of beekeeping at the U. S. Bureau of entomology, the value of bees is greater from their cross-pollination activities than their honey production.

A colony of bees, numbering from 15,000 over winter to as many as 100,000 in the height of summer, will gather about 25 pounds of nectar a day. Its supply of honey, outside of that kept for itself over the year, will be from 50 to 150 pounds in a season.

Low Yield This Year
This year the surplus supply has been poor, averaging only 40 pounds to a colony, although some beekeepers who come here reported an average of more than 100 pounds for their colonies.

At a sale price of from 10 cents to 30 cents a pound, the beekeeper enjoys quite a profit.

Yet the only cost is the original amount he pays for the bees when he first starts in this business. That's about $10 for a colony, which grows in a short time into several colonies. There's no maintenance cost because the bees seek the fields within a radius of two miles—fields of clover and buckwheat mostly, and fruit orchards.

Where these plants exist in abundance there is good territory for successful bee culture. Therefore California finds itself first among the states in bee culture, producing 15 per cent of the honey. Texas is next and New York third.

Of course the climate and soil have much to do to make beekeeping successful. Bees thrive in a humid climate, one that offers cool nights and hot days in summer. And the soil heavy in limestone and clay furnishes the best resources for their activities.

If You Only Knew NOW What Your Tires Will Do This Winter ?

THERE are two ways of doing things—the right and wrong. The wrong way of answering the tire problem for this winter is to forget all about your tires until something happens to them.

The right way is to drive down to your tire man (and we would like to be YOUR tire man) and have him look them over and remedy the faulty conditions that may exist.

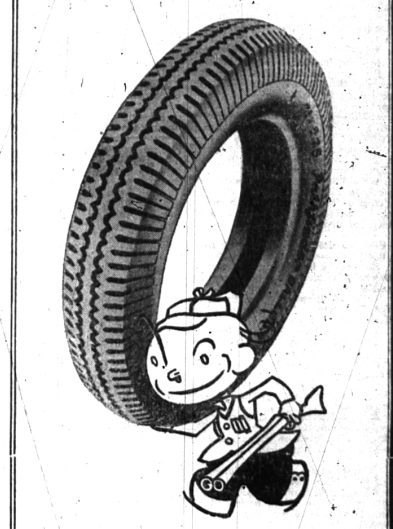

That is one way of keeping your hands warm and dry this winter!
