

As Told by Irvin S. Cobb

THE PREDICTION

A luncheon in New York of the Catholic Actors' guild has, John Talbot Smith told a story which had an especial appeal to his audience, most of whom were communicants of the same faith of which he is a distinguished clergyman. Father Smith said that a young woman in the confessional confided that she was afraid she had been spending some of her money foolishly.

"Spending your money foolishly calls for penance," said the priest sternly. "How have you been spending yours?"

"Well, father, I went to a fortune teller," admitted the penitent. "Oh, ho, so you went to a fortune teller, eh? Well, that's wrong to be telling. In the first place, professional fortune tellers are most of them frauds, and, in the second place, they pretend to deal with the supernatural. And what did you go for this fortune teller?"

"I gave him two dollars, father."

"Worse and worse—wasting your hard-earned wages on a faker. And in exchange for your two dollars what did he do for you?"

"He told me a pack of lies, father, about my past and my future."

"What did he say about your past?"

"Only a pack of lies, as I was just after telling you."

"And what did he tell you about your future?"

"He said, father, I would shortly be going on a long, hard journey."

"Well," said the priest reflectively, "he may have lied to you about your past, but when he predicted that you would be going on a long, hard journey in the near future he was not far wrong, after all. You'll do the stations of the cross twelve times!"

FOR THE GOOSE—
What if you did lose a stone—ain't you still got the ring? And if you lost the ring, too, ain't you still got the finger?

A woman'll mourn for a dead parent for years—for a dead husband till she gets another—for a dead child forever.

You won't enjoy the fragrance of skunk cabbage, even if you water them with attar of roses.

FOR THE GANDER—
Standin' the cold is partly a matter of endurance and stren'th and partly havin' a warm coat.

A smelt is as good a buy as a salmon if they both been outa water three days.

Shoes of Old Romans
Shoes were commonly worn by the Romans. Senators wore a special style reaching to the middle of the leg, colored red and bearing a silver crescent just above the foot. Men of home usually wore black shoes, except in the case of one holding public office. In this case the shoes usually were red.

Food Combinations
Most people know how good red currant jelly is with mutton, but few have tried prunes with roast veal. This is a common dish in Sweden, where food combinations are carefully studied. Milk with broth, again, seems unappetizing to us, but you will often find it relished in Belgium.
