Coch Johnson Tells Rotarians Game Reflects What Youth Is Taught At Home

That modern football, together with most other competitive physical games, is the cradle in which future men and women gain their early lessons for the upbuilding of manhood and womanhood, was the substance of a speech made by Coach Johnson, Baldwin high school senior session room teacher and football coach, before members of the Birmingham Rotary club Monday night. Mr. Johnson was the guest of honor at the meeting of the Birmingham Rotary club Monday night. Mr. Johnson was the guest of honor at the meeting of the Birmingham Rotary club Monday night.

The Magic Of Football

"What is the magic of football?" asked Mr. Johnson. "Why did nearly 50,000 persons last Saturday take the same time and trouble to witness a game at Ann Arbor? The answer is simple. The solution is really a portrayal of the instinctive impulses of human nature. As far back as we can learn, competitive physical games were the sport of nations; people came for many miles to witness a game of football which the brain and brawn of contestants was pitted, each hoping for victory.

Character Is Revealed

"When a boy gets on a football field he is able to determine just what he has been taught in the church and the school. Here we may see whether he is courageous, co-operative, subject to law, authority, filled with a spirit of comradeship, and many of the other necessary requisites for proper adjustment to modern life. On a football field we are able to help him strengthen these qualities, to the end that he may become a fitting citizen of the nation.

Excitement of Zoning Election Recalls Fight for Library Here

The excitement occasioned by the recent zoning election calls to the minds of older residents of Birmingham the 1907 election, when the library changed from a private to a village institution.

"People certainly were in high dudgeon over it," Mrs. Retts M. Barr, president of the library board, who has lived in Birmingham for the last 35 years, said. "But it passed, and I don't believe anyone has ever regretted it since, for the library has certainly come along beautifully."

Before the village took over the library, it was financed by the Ladies' Library Society, since became the Women's Library club. Mrs. Barr's mother was organized in 1897, with Martha Baldwin as the guiding spirit. The women started with 48 books. It was only through the unflinching courage and spirit of these far-sighted women that the library was kept going.

"I noticed in the 25 years ago column in The Eccentric a week or two ago that there were 2,100 books in the library at that time. Now we have about 7,000. At that time the library was open only one afternoon and evening a week, Saturday.

Birmingham's cross-country team lost to the Pontiac lighted Wednesday afternoon by a margin of 17 points; the score totaling Pontiac 16, Birmingham 37.

The course which was two and a quarter miles long, up and down many hills, proved to be too much for the Maroon and White team, who were unable to pace the swifter Orange and Black aggression.
