An unusually strong state ticket is being presented by the Republican party this year to Michigan voters. Heading its list of candidates are the two victors in the primary election of Sept. 14, Fred W. Green, of Ionia, for governor, and Luren D. Dickinson, of Charlotte, for lieutenant governor. The five other candidates on the ticket were placed in nomination for their respective offices by the party's state convention in Detroit on September 28.

While all the candidates are men well known to Michigan voters, three are new timber for office, three are up for re-election to the offices they now occupy and one is a candidate again for a post he has held before.

Fred W. Green, of Ionia, who heads the ticket as the party's choice for governor, takes rank as the most popular candidate ever to run in a November election for this position. Not only was he nominated by the tremendous majority of 160,000, but he carried nearly all the counties of the state in his sweeping victory, some of them by top-heavy votes.

Mr. Green has long been one of the business and social leaders of the western portion of the lower peninsula of Michigan. He has given his party long and loyal service in its state organization, serving for years as treasurer of its state central committee. At home in Ionia he not only is the leading business man and manufacturer of the city but has been honored by thirteen consecutive terms in the office of mayor of the city, a position which he is now holding.

Covered State. In his primary campaign Mr. Green covered the whole state so thoroughly that voters everywhere learned from him personally the things for which he stood and the way in which he intends to conduct the affairs of state if chosen executive.

He also became known to the entire state as "the man with the smile," his agreeable personality making scores of new friends for him during the campaign.

Mr. Green is one of the new candidates on the ticket. The others are John S. Haggerty, of Detroit, and William W. Potter, of Hastings. While they are new men for the offices they seek, they are well known because of service already given the state in other capacities.

John S. Haggerty is one of Detroit's most prominent citizens. He was born and raised in a township outside the city at that time, but now part of it, he and Henry Ford attended the township school together when they were boyhood neighbors and friends. Mr. Haggerty became a brick manufacturer and scored a business success years ago. His boyhood on the farm made him interested in all farming problems and he has been in the service of the board of the Michigan State fair. He is largely due to the growth of the State fair from a small, semi-bankrupt enterprise to one of the big, successful institutions of the state.

Road Builder. Road building also has claimed for years a large part of Mr. Haggerty's best efforts. He has served for years on Wayne County's board of road commissioners and was the pioneer concrete road builder. His first experiments with this type of road were looked upon doubtfully by many, but he soon showed their superiority over all other forms of road and Wayne county became the Mecca of road builders from all over the nation and from foreign lands as well. Now this type of road is almost universal.

As secretary of state, the post to which the Republican state convention nominated Mr. Haggerty, he will be the leader of the state's road building program and bring to that work his broad experience and wide knowledge gained during the past twenty years of development.

William W. Potter, third new candidate for a major state office, was nominated by the party convention for attorney general, a post for which he has been mentioned before because of his high standing in the legal profession. He has given the state splendid service as a member of the public utilities commission and has long held a commanding position in the state affairs of Michigan.

Tenth Nomination. For the tenth consecutive time the Republican party has placed in nomination for auditor general Oramel B. Fuller, a man in whom the voters of the state, regardless of party, have placed implicit confidence in the handling of their business affairs. His splendid service over a period of eighteen years places him in a rank by himself among men who have labored in the interests of Michigan, and the voters of the whole commonwealth will welcome the opportunity to continue him in office.

Frank D. McKay, of Grand Rapids, state treasurer of Michigan for the past two years, has been nominated for a second term in the office which he has so well filled. Judge Ernest A. Snow, able jurist, a sagacious, now serving on the supreme court bench of the state by appointment to fill a vacancy, is the third candidate named by the party to continue in his office.

Laren D. Dickinson, of Charlotte, is the party's choice for lieutenant governor, having been chosen as the running mate of Fred W. Green in the September primary. Mr. Dickinson previously served six years in office, having been elected to it in 1914, 1916 and 1918. His nomination again to his old post makes it certain that a man of dependable experience will preside over the deliberations of the state senate in the coming legislative session of 1927.
