THE WOODWARD HURRICANE

To the Editor: I started in Lansing, emanating from five offices and officious gentlemen, evidently inflated with a sense of their official importance and the wisdom of a wiser woodward avenue.

When the state dignitaries exploded and released the pecky hurricane, it headed straight for Birmingham, sailing over villages and cities en route, even missing Pontiac and her Southern belle, Saginaw.

It is its devastating course, it leveled all homes and business buildings, including such new and costly buildings as the First Presbyterian Church and the First National Bank, and also uprooting every shade tree and green shrub which graced and beautified our great highway and adorned our lovely town.

Citizens viewing the desolation wrought exclaimed, "This is awful; the damage is irreparable, the loss terrific, but here, living in the east or west of Woodward, calmly observed, "Why, this will give us the wider Woodward for which we have hoped and prayed."

Yes, but the loss to many property holders who are your neighbors and friends will be very great, even ruinous, and the loss to the taxpayers of the state will run up into millions of dollars.

Now if this devastating storm had only been deflected a little to the eastward and had traveled along the Grand Trunk track instead of Woodward avenue, we would have had another fine highway, which, with a 100-foot Woodward, would have furnished ample room for all traffic and business purposes, saving the great inconvenience and loss and the vicious and useless waste of the taxpayers' money.
