Romance Under 'Big Top' Culminates In Nuptials

With the culmination late last night of a spectacular romance under the "big top," a pretty, blue-eyed girl of 19, unusually quiet at ease before the clematis lights, had her first case of stage fright.

She was Helen McClure, ingenue of the Hunt Stock company, playing this week under canvas at Ann and Brown streets, and back stage could think of an answer.

Carl, 23, a juvenile in the company. The ceremony was performed at the conclusion of the company's presentation of "Money Mad," a play in which both the wedding principals had parts.

The ceremony took place on the stage and the audience remained after the show to pay tribute to the youthful bride and bridegroom. The Rev. Rowland E. Moore, pastor of the Redeemer Lutheran Church, officiated.

Miss McClure made a quick change from the costume she wore in the play to her bridal gown of white georgette. The audience was stilled as the orchestra started the first part of "Lohengrin." Then Miss McClure was trembling and said to her father, long will visit the D. M. Ferry Co. T. McClure, another member of the company, who gave her away, "I suppose I have a reason to tremble. It's the first time, you know."

At the conclusion of the ceremony the couple was showered with rice by the other members of the company who lined the stage—the other members who, during the service, maintained faces so solemn that they belied any possibility of the rice throwing.

Miss McClure was reminded that when she joined the company almost a year ago she declared it would be all career and no husband for her. That was her boast in those days, her fellow workers declared. Then Clifford came along and they were old friends, having trooped in the same company in Kansas, and the world took on a rosier hue and finally, in Birmingham, the pastor, was called.

"Well," asked Helen, after the nuptials, "why not?" and her vivacious eyes sparkled. No one called.

This is the third wedding among those connected with the Hunt Stock company in recent months. The latest was the marriage of Mrs. Chas. James, who was bridesmaid last night. The bride's brother, Grady McClure, another juvenile with the company, was best man.

They do not plan a wedding trip and will appear in the performance of "The Man Who Came Back" tonight. Helen will play the part of Letty, but her husband is not cast.

The Grosse Pointe and Eastern Michigan Horticultural society, to which a number of Birmingham and Bloomfield Hills residents belonging and said to her father, long will visit the D. M. Ferry Co. T. McClure, another member of the company, who gave her away, "I suppose I have a reason to tremble. It's the first time, you know."

Mrs. W. Nelson Whittemore, of Opdyke road, entertained at a supper party prior to the movie at Cranbrook Friday night.

The present minister of education in New South Wales was handling a pick in a coal mine 12 years ago.

A servant girl employed by Dr. R. C. Kester of London also acted as his chauffeur in khaki uniform.
