GIRL SCOUTS PLAN FIRST EXHIBIT

Birmingham Council At Work On Arrangements For First Annual Affair

The Birmingham Girl Scout council is working today on tentative plans for an entirely new competitive exhibition to be held in late January or early February. Usually after the mid-winter examinations.

The exhibition, which will be probably the first of its kind in Girl Scout work in the village, will include all the various phases of the work, and possibly new subjects. Marching and drill will be a feature of the exhibition.

In view of the fact that word was received recently that arrival of the new Girl Scout uniform would be delayed until late January or early February, the girls will be equipped in dress uniform of blue, khaki and white middie. By that time each troop will have picked its name and colors and selected an individual troop color which will mark the performers.

As a practical demonstration of friendly relations between the two organizations, it is possible that Boy Scouts will have a part in charge of the drill work in preparation for the exhibition. The exhibition will be given through Boy Scout training which will be applied to the Girl Scout work.
