Suggestions for Cooking Prunes

By HANNAH WING
When winter lightens up on the supply of fresh fruit available one turns to the graces of a faithful year round standby. And strangely enough, one rediscovered that this beautiful, really delicious fruit can be used in cakes, pies, sandwiches, salads and puddings of many kinds.

Prunes should be cooked in a covered dish or pan with just enough water to give the amount of juice wanted. It is important to use as little water as possible, so as not to dilute the juice unduly. Soaking is unnecessary, if the cooking is done slowly. Sugar may be added if desired, but it is usually unnecessary.

Cooked prune pulp, mashed and flavored slightly with lemon and sugar, with or without chopped walnuts or pecans, makes a number of good dishes. Served with cream the pulp is a dessert in itself. It may be used for a tart or jelly, shell filling, or as a cake filling.

Alone, or with almonds, pecans, walnuts or cranberries, good oat-walnut filling. Spread or sponge cake, prune pulp makes a pleasant variation of the popular jelly roll. Prune shortcake offers a suggestion for dessert when fresh fruit and not available. Prune shortcake offers a suggestion for dessert when fresh fruit and not available. Sophisticated and Youthful Gowns

A black evening gown worn by a young woman is always attractive and is a decidedly serviceable one. The gown is black, with a white net collar and a white net waist. The skirt is of net, trimmed with fringe, and has a dark collar which ties in front.

The Spring Mode - What Will It Be?

By Madam Jenny, Paris
From a big pile of letters from American women, asking questions about French fashions, we have chosen three at random, and this is what they want to know: "What will the popular models for spring be in your collection?" and "What will the length of skirts be this year, and will black satin be good style throughout the spring?"

It is not always a easy matter to choose a good subject for an article, for one that is pleasing to the author is oftentimes uninteresting to the reader, but by finding my subject in this manner—taking it straight from the reader—I am sure of pleasing both myself and the reader. Old Things in New Spirit. The materials that I will use in my spring collection are almost without limit. We are living in the richest age of wearing materials that ever has existed.

Through a Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON
Come and do me!
That is the cry of every one of our unconfident girlfriends.

In the office Eve sits at the next desk to Adam, doing exactly the same sort of work, accomplishing the same results. Does it follow, as logically it should, that the two pay checks are equal? No. Why? For no other reason of which we can think but that he belongs to the sex called stronger.

Living and Loving

Problems seem to be just about as plentiful as the type of variety as people.

Black Satin Will Remain

Certainly, black satin is good style, and it will remain good style indefinitely, especially the shiny and crepe varieties. I am now making a gown of black satin whose only trimming is red buttons—small and of a strange color, and matching the buttons in a coral-colored handbag. This harmony is achieved by somewhat different means, than usual, but it is all the more pleasing for that. I like to match the

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

MENU HINT
A nourishing soup for the noon luncheon is always good foundation. The toasted bread strips may take the place of croissants and will be good for the children especially if whole wheat bread is used. The following menu was planned for a mother and two children.

TODAY'S RECIPES
Nut Cream Tomato Soup—One can tomato soup, two tablespoons peanut butter, as much water as tomato soup, one tablespoon of cream or canned milk for each serving. Cream the peanut butter with hot water, add soup and water. Season with salt to taste. Let come to a boil. Place milk in serving dish and pour soup over this slowly. This enriches the soup, and by combining in this way the milk will not curdle.
