FIRE DEPARTMENT HAS BUSY MONTH

Eleven Alarms Answered By Fighters In Thirty Days Here

Eleven fire alarms were answered by the Birmingham fire department during February costing the village, according to the report out today. Fire drills costing $150 brought the total to $1,052.

The largest fire of the month was the J. H. Muzzy home at Oak Knobs, which burned Feb. 11. The water used was estimated at 270,000 gallons, and firemen received $354 for their work there, the report shows.

Two automobiles were burned during the month, one in the garage of Charles Faucher, at 761 Holland avenue, and one on south Woodward avenue belonging to Chester Pribble, 17131 Shields avenue, Detroit. Damage to Faucher's car was said to be about $700. No estimate was given of the damage to the other car.

Other calls answered were at the Johnson home, 401 Deepside drive; at Emil Olm's, 525 Southfield avenue; at Holly Mudge's, 62 Hamilton place; at Leslie G. Lambert's, 400 Park street; at S. S. WHAT'S WHAT in WASHINGTON

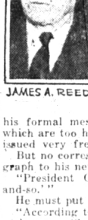
STEWART TELLS WHY AND HOW OF "PRESIDENTIAL SPOKESMAN"

By CHARLES P. STEWART
Exclusive Central Press Dispatch to The Eccentric.

WASHINGTON, March 17.—Senator Jim Reed of Missouri is sick of the "White House spokesman."

He says the "spokesman" is fiction" and too childish "fiction" to fool anybody, at that.



JAMES A. REED

The theory is that the president mustn't be quoted. He receives the correspondents and says things which he expects to be printed. In fact, he wants them to be printed. It's his only way of telling the country what's on his mind, short of his formal messages to congress, which are too hard to get up to be issued very frequently.

But no correspondent must telegraph to his newspaper:

"President Coolidge said: 'So-and-so.'"

He must put it:

"According to the White House spokesman: 'So-and-so.'"

* * *

The "White House spokesman" appears to have originated in President Roosevelt's time.

There were reasons for him from the president's standpoint and from the correspondent's, too.

If the president said something and it didn't go down so well, he could sidestep, provided he hadn't been quoted personally. He could say, "My spokesman misunderstood," or "was misinformed," or some such thing.

As for the correspondents, when they attributed something to the president, as having reached them through his "spokesman," and the president, having changed his mind, enrolled them in the membership of his "Anahias Club," there was always the alibi, "Well, the presidential spokesman said so, anyway."

* * *

The system may have had its uses for awhile, before everybody got to know that the president and his "spokesman" are one and the same.

Now, however, as Senator Reed says, it's only a "silly subterfuge."

Still, those Washington traditions die hard. About the only thing that seems likely to kill the "presidential spokesman" is ridicule. He's had considerable, without succumbing to it, but he may get enough to finish him yet.

* * *

If the president cares to stand pat on what he really says, he stands mighty little chance of being misquoted by any correspondent who can make his misquotation stick.

He receives them to the tune of 40 at a time and any one of them whose account is much out of line with the rest is bound to have hard work to convince the country that he's right and all the rest wrong.

Furthermore, all that the chief executive is asked is asked in writing, and all that he answers is stenographically taken down.

It's also understood that the stenographer's notes are his and his alone. He can produce them and prove that he didn't say what he's said to have said, but a reporter couldn't call for them to prove that he did.

* * *

It isn't, anyway, when the president talks to the correspondents in a bunch that he "gets in bad."

It's when he grants an interview to some particular one, edits.

It's also when some statesman who's known to be in his confidence comes out of the executive offices and "whispers," behind his hand, "The president told me this and so."

Looks like these, with no "spokesman" to serve as goat, are what make the president really sore.

The bread trust is not the only one that is concerned with dough.

FEBRUARY LIGHT MONTH FOR POLICE

Fifteen Persons Arrested As Offenders; Three Drunks Jailed

Only 15 men were arrested and brought before Judge Floyd S. Buck in his justice court during February, the monthly police report, complete today, shows. The fines totaled $205.80. Ten of these 15 cases were for drunkenness. Jail sentences were given three drunken offenders.

William McLoughlin received the severest sentence, 35 days in jail, and Henry Turner is spending 30 days in jail, both for being drunk. C. A. Jewell, was given seven days on the same charge. Elmer J. Smith was fined and $70 and $5 costs on this charge and Vern Morris paid a $45 fine and $5 cost for it. Charles Baker paid $30 fine and costs for being drunk.

There was one speeding case. J. E. MacKenzie paid $12 fine and costs on this charge. Edward Lerman paid $10 fine and costs for reckless driving, the only case of this kind to come up during February.

Five-dollar fines were imposed on one man for not having his operator's license, one for using old license plates. A $10 fine was given for driving to the left of a street car.

Some astonishing stories of old people have come from Russia. Recently one Audrey Jukov, aged 157, met an untimely end, according to a press dispatch. While out skating after imbibing freely of vodka he became reckless, ventured upon thin ice and broke through. That night he died of croup.

The cotton gin was invented in 1793, the synthetic variety about 130 years later.
