WOUNDS CHILD, MAN IS JAILED

Draws 2-3 Years For Wielding Shotgun In Township

(Special to The Eccentric)
Pontiac, Nov. 16.—Having been convicted two weeks ago of felonious assault for firing a shotgun near his home which struck a three-year-old girl, Glenn Lent, 33-year-old grocery clerk of West Bloomfield township was sentenced today to from 18 months to three years in the Michigan State prison at Jackson. The little girl, Dorothy Courtney, who is the daughter of Lent's common-law wife, is in the University hospital at Ann Arbor, undergoing an operation in an attempt to save her foot, which was struck by the shot.

Lent had declared on the witness stand during the trial the shooting was an accident. He had been drinking. He had been married and divorced and had been living for more than a year with Mrs. Margaret Courtney as his common-law wife.

"My opinion of the case is that you had been drinking and were careless of the safety of others," said Judge Covert in passing sentence. "I am pretty well satisfied the shooting was not an accident. The little girl will have to suffer from your attempt to scare some one."

The testimony revealed that Lent fired a shotgun twice in the living room of his home in the presence of his wife, her brother and a man friend of the brother who had called to spend the evening. The little child was playing on the floor and was the only one injured by the shots.

An attempt was made by Attorney Chas. S. Matthews, appearing as counsel for Lent, to get a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had inspected the shotgun, an exhibit in the case which had not been shown to the jury. It was during a noon recess that one of the jurors was permitted to handle the pump gun and to see how it worked. This privilege was not accorded the rest of the jury and Attorney Matthews argued this was improper information which may have influenced the juror in his opinion.

Judge Covert denied the motion, holding that the act of the juror in no way influenced the finding in the case.

The WORLD and All By CHARLES H. DRISCOLL

CALLING THE COWS

I note with intense interest that Mrs. R. C. Moore, of Woodward, Oklahoma, has attained the distinction of world's champion cow-caller. It seems that the matter of the championship has been threshed out in closely-guarded contests, all over Oklahoma, where cows still have some little distance to traverse between pasture and milking trough. Moore is the possessor of a rich contralto cow-calling voice, and her position at the top of her profession seems to be indisputed. She has been awarded a silver cow-bell as a trophy.

She has never attended a cow-calling contest, so I do not know just how such affairs are conducted. But there is an important question in my mind when I hear of championships being handed out to cow-callers, for the sake of the cows.

Do the cows come when called?

Cows in the southwest must have changed greatly in character and habits of life, since my boyhood, if mere calling, in however many a voice, will bring them to the milking place.

On our Kansas farm, not far from the Missouri line, we had from fifty to a hundred head of cattle all the time, and the usual composition of these herds was milker and cow. These cows were long, rangy animals, built for speed. They had streamline bodies and an extra look in their eyes.

These cows could run faster and longer than any dogs we were able to train to chase them.

Usually, we were milking five or six cows, and I was in the season. That is to say, we milked them whenever we could get them. The hundred or so cattle which which the cattle ranged was half covered by underbrush, hills, encampments of thorny vines, and other things which made it difficult to put the cows out of hiding was to let the dogs on them. My brother and I got all our early athletic training in that hundred acres, chasing those cows a foot and a horse, with packs of about thirty dogs, whose duty it was to work the cows out of the brush.

It seems that the old-fashioned dairy methods have changed during the last quarter of a century in the northwest. I think it is significant of our advancing civilization that a mere woman can now induce the cows to come home and be milked. But it would like to be assured that the cows do really come when called. And if they do not, I can recommend several types of cow-dogs, out of my youthful experience with long-haired Kansas streamline cows.

INCORPORATION DOUBTFUL, CLAIM

Hazel Park District May Again Oppose Annexation

(Special to The Eccentric)
Hazel Park, Nov. 16.—Plans for incorporating the Hazel Park district as a village or a city have practically been abandoned. It was stated by one of the leading citizens of the district Tuesday.

"It begins to look like the people want to remain as they are and be annexed to Detroit or to Ferndale or Royal Oak," he added. "The incorporation proposal has been put to the people in several different ways and each time they have shown by their vote that there is a slightly greater number of them opposed to annexation as there are those who want to incorporate."

"With Ferndale seeking to annex the western part of the proposed Hazel Park village and with the people living in that section apparently well pleased with the prospect, it looks to us, if that section is left out of Hazel Park, we will be without a railroad and consequently with very little prospect of getting one. We had planned on taking in the Grand Trunk road right off way, thus securing a railroad line and also a property owner that would help pay our taxes," this civic leader stated.

Mrs. Sarah Haughton of Myrtle Point, Ore., gave a tramp a sandwich 24 years ago, and recently received from him two $1 bills and a letter of appreciation.
