Declares Americans Ready To Die For Humanitarian Cause

"If there is any one thing that the American people have to be thankful for at this part of it, it is for its splendid attitude toward the human factor in civilization. By this I mean that as a nation, if people are ready and willing to lay down their lives for a real humanitarian cause," said Rev. M. Atkins, in his talk, lamented the emphasis which the world places on its material possessions. He pointed out that the United States, in its present era of unprecedented material prosperity, was willing to lay down their lives for a real humanitarian cause.
