THEATERS

GARRICK

"The Play's the Thing"—the latest comedy from the pen of Ferenc Molnar, Hungarian dramatist, author of "Liliom," "The Swan," and other successes will be at the Garrick Theater, Detroit, next week beginning Sunday night, Nov. 6th, with Holbrook Blinn and his company under the direction of Gilbert Miller.

The English adaptation of the play was made by P. G. Wodehouse, popular playwright and novelist, whose humorous English style reproduces effectively the subtleties and suavities of the original text.

A play about the theater as its title denotes, "The Play's The Thing" calls upon Mr. Blinn to portray the role of a famous dramatist, Sandor Tursi, a role unlike anything that he has played in recent years. In his company are appearing Herbert Bunston, Mansky, a lyric writer; Martha Lorber as the beautiful prima donna, the toast of Europe; Harry Mestayer as a leading man and Gavin Muir as a juvenile lead, both of them in love with the prima donna. The action takes place at a house party in a castle on the Italian riviera where all five characters are guests.

The comedy has been under the personal direction of Mr. Blinn and has just closed a successful season at Henry Miller's Theater, New York, where it ran almost an entire year, and might still be going, as it closed in the height of its success, to allow Mr. Blinn and his company a brief holiday before undertaking their trancontinental tour.

BONSTELLE

"The Little Spitfire," the next attraction at the Bonstelle Playhouse, Detroit, beginning Sunday night, Nov. 6th, is a sprightly comedy by Myron C. Fagan, the author of "Six Cylinders." When it was produced in New York theater managers didn't think it would flourish, during the run of torrid plays then prevalent on Broadway, but it was so successful at the Court Theater that it outlived its run there and was moved into two other houses, finishing the season with full houses.

Of interest to Bonstelle patrons is the fact that several former Bonstellers have played prominent parts in "The Little Spitfire." Sylvia Field was the original "Gypsy" and was only replaced when it became necessary for her to leave the cast to fulfill another contract. Lester Vail has played the lead in it and Mae Collins was seen in the title role in Detroit.

"The Little Spitfire" proves that we have not yet become so sophisticated in the world's middle strata of life. This type of play is still interested in the girl who is thrust into society from the middle strata of life. This type of play is still interested in the girl who is thrust into society from the middle strata of life. This type of play is still interested so long as millionaires continue to marry chorus girls, which, we imagine, will be for some time.

The heroine of this particular story is, of course, a chorus girl who marries a millionaire, finding herself quite miserable in the company of his aristocratic mother-in-law and her associates.

All the characters in "The Little Spitfire" are human and a number of them most lovable.
