THE Fox and Hounds Inn Building located on the southeast corner of Woodward and Long Lake Road, is in the very heart of Bloomfield Hills Village. Because of this strategic location in the village it serves as a very practical first step in the establishing of business organizations. This is in the mind, that Mr. Manley D. Davis, resident of Bloomfield Hills, conceived the idea of creating a community and business center which the composite of eight stores and an inn now manifests.

Although a few of the stores are not as yet ready for occupancy, Mr. Davis has announced that all of the stores but one have been rented and that the latter was under consideration by a Birmingham business man. The occupants and their businesses are as follows: The A. M. Turner Company operates the Bloomfield Hills Village Dress Shop; Mrs. Turner is in charge. The Inn at the Fox and Hounds Building is under the management of Mrs. Frazer; this establishment consists of the Inn proper and the lpatery. A branch of Hammelefs has a store offering their famous home-made candies and also the customary fountain service, cigars, tobacco, etc.—drug accessories is an added feature. Miss Maurine Hammelefs will manage the store. A filling station under the management of L. L. Armstrong, who has secured an agency for Standard Oil products and offers the recognized "Five Point" service of that company, is also located here. A plumbing shop will serve as a branch of the main office of Clark and Tegges of Pontiac; everything modern in plumbing features will be displayed in this store. E. J. Butler, realtor, will remove his office from west Long Lake road to this building; Bloomfield Downs, immediately adjacent to the Inn building, is subdivided and now for sale by his office.

Bloomfield Downs

Recall for a moment your own impressions while abroad, when you motored from London out through Surrey or Hampshire. The quaint little villages—the ivy-colored walls, the beautiful green of the trees and hedges—the quiet dignity of the landscape.

That is the atmosphere Mr. Edward J. Butler is transplanting in Bloomfield Hills. Immediately east of Woodward, along the south side of East Long Lake Road, Bloomfield Downs lies in the heart of the aristocratic hills country.

Plans for all the public utilities have been approved, and construction started.

Bear in mind, this is a village, not a group of estates—no expensive upkeep for large areas of land, every convenience to be found anywhere in Detroit, and the freedom from managerial responsibility in dealing with the servant problem. Living in Bloomfield Downs, your departure from town consists merely in packing your bag and turning the key in your door.
