Care Necessary For Silk "Undies"

By WANDA BARTON

There is a knack in laundering silk underwear successfully as in doing all other things. While silk does not shrink perceptibly, it gets stiff and harsh if washed improperly. The underwear of today is made rather elaborately, unless one gets the strictly tailored.

In preparing the underwear for the tub, it is always wise to remove the draw ribbons and wash separately, and also to look over the pieces for any stains. Perspiration is destructive to silk, rotting it out, so that it is wise to wash the garments, if not after each wearing, as frequently as possible. The stains should be removed first, generally by a little boiling water before the garment is washed in water with soap.

The amount of soap to use in preparing the soaks for the underwear depends upon the hardness of the water and the amount of dirt on the garments. Use enough white soap or flakes; in lukewarm water to make the water sudsy, and then smooth and nice put in the pieces. Soak them around in the water quickly for a few minutes, then take each article and rub the soiled places, then dip it back into the water while you do each piece the same way, then swirl them around again and softly squeeze them between the hands. Wring out between the hands and put into a fresh lukewarm rinse. Then lift the garments by bands or straps and drain for a few seconds, then lay over a line covered with a towel. In about five minutes place the garment on the board and press with a warm iron, picking out the lace with the fingers so that it will look like new when it dries. If lace is ironed it has an old look.

If the silk dries too quickly before it has time to iron it, place a dampened cloth over the wrong side and it will iron smoothly. If there are heavy embroidered motifs on the garment, face them down on a thin grass mat.

A very striking evening coat is of silver lame embroidered in lace and red. The sleeves are fitted tightly at the wrist and have bands of black fur under the elbow. The same fur trims the length of the coat, as well as collar.

When the children rebel at eating spinach or other green vegetables try "eggs in a nest." Make a fluffy bird's nest of well-cooked spinach and arrange tiny "eggs" made from cottage or cream cheese in the nest. Sprinkle each "egg" with pulverized yolk of hard-boiled egg.

WITH WOMEN OF TODAY

By MISS LILIAN CAMPBELL

Under the expert guidance of Mrs. Mary Slattery, a super-saleswoman from Ireland, a shop which exhibits exclusively articles produced in the Emerald Isle has made an outstanding success in New York.

It is not unusual for women from across the seas to establish themselves successfully in American business world, but it is seldom one succeeds as Mrs. Slattery has done, in bringing to the United States the industries of her native land, thus building for herself a career in familiar fields on foreign soil.

They Learn About Democrats From Her

Women are again going to school at the headquarters of the Women's National Democratic Club in Washington to learn how to be good Democrats from Mrs. Minnie Fisher Cunningham, executive secretary of the club. Mrs. Cunningham conducted a similar school last summer, the success of which induced the club to try again this year.

Original Flag Lost

The original flag made by Betsy Ross in Philadelphia, sank to the bottom of the sea off the coast of France when Commodore John Paul Jones' famous Bon Homme Richard sank, according to researches made by Secretary of the Navy Wilbur.

May Light'em Up

The right to smoke cigarettes while sitting at their desks has been extended to women employees of the Marine Corps in Washington, D. C.

Third National W. C. T. U. Meet

For the third time in its history, Minnesota is the scene of a national W. C. T. U. convention. The first was held in 1886, in Minneapolis, and was presided over by the founder of the organization, the late Frances Willard, who was the first to preach the idea of national prohibition. The second, in 1898, at St. Paul, was a memorial to Miss Willard, who had died a few months before. The third will be held August 25 to 28 at St. Paul.

Grow Wheat

Mrs. Ida Watkins, of Danville, Kan., has 3,200 acres planted in wheat. Last year she produced 20,000 bushels from 1,250 acres.

Miss Bernice Prescott, 23, has been elected to the Middlebury county union in England, of which her father is also a member.

Fashions And Fads

By MILDRED ASH

Giving them the air of being quite festive and gay, brightly colored Deauville kerchief-scarfs add dash and verve to white flannel or silk sports frocks or jacket costumes. Sometimes these jaunty silk squares are loosely knotted at one shoulder, and on other occasions they are worn like Ascot ties. Solid centers and deep checked, striped, plaided or figured borders are greatly favored.

Gazing skyward need not be a sign of religious zeal or an interest in astronomy. In this case it merely signifies that Parisian stylists in seeking inspiration for a new shade for fashionable evening gowns adopted as the most distinctive color the sapphire blue of a moonlit sky. This tone is quite the latest and smartest coloring for formal dinner and dance frocks.

What every woman doesn't know

All homekeepers realize, of course, how easily and quickly household tasks are done with the aid of electrical appliances.

Not so many, however, know that the comfort they receive from their appliances is greatly increased by the little, inexpensive device known as the Convenience Outlet.

A convenience outlet allows you to "plug in" your appliance without the bother of unscrewing a lamp bulb and using a long length of unsightly, and possibly dangerous, cord.

You would do well to see an electrical contractor about this matter. Or, if you like, let us advise you how to proceed (we don't do this work ourselves).
