Mrs. Theodore F. MacManus, of Stonybrook, has gone to Washington to spend the remainder of the school season with her sons there.

Balanced Trimming

We hear much of the one-sided or asymmetric line in dress. The dinner dress pictured shows that balanced lines also are used. A huge sash on each hip does the trick. The dress is black pussy willow taffeta, with, over dress and sash of black dotted lace.

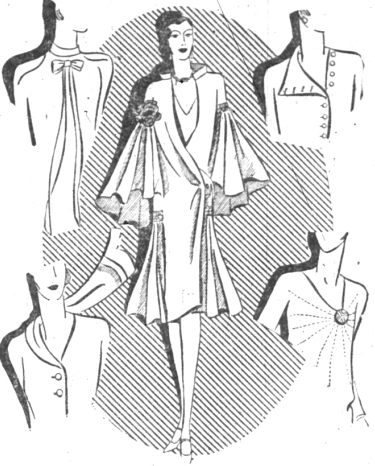

WOMEN TO HEAR OF GOVERNMENT

State's Experience in Politics Topic at League of Women Voters Meeting

Michigan's experience and ideas in the work of the League of Women voters will play an important part in the deliberations of the National League's eighth convention meeting this week in Chicago.

Mrs. Henry Steffens, Jr. of Detroit, first vice-president of the state league and president of the Wayne County organization, is a member of the committee appointed to outline suggested non-partisan political activities for the League in the 1928 presidential campaign, and will present the report of her committee Saturday morning. Another state officer to take an active part is Mrs. Clay H. Hollister of Grand Rapids, who will be on the program of the gala finance banquet of Friday evening.

What To Wear, And How To Wear It

By LUCY CLARKE

Fashion Editor for Central Press and The Eccentric

Necklines are receiving more attention in this feminine trend of details than they have received for many a season probably more than ever before. It would seem as though every couturier and confectioner in Paris had concentrated on the neck, as great is the variety and treatment of necklines. The V and the round neck we have still with us, in addition to the "one-way traffic" treatment and a host of other cuts and manipulations. A few of the newer necklines that have made their way out of Paris are sketched here.

In the majority of treatment the neckline may be becoming worn by practically every woman. There are a few that are becoming to certain types only. One of these is the Jenny collar, shown at the upper left of the sketch. It is fastened high, and for its contrast, Newkings, you will notice, like the new kid shoes, take to simple lines and subtle trimmings, in numerous ways of achievement.

The baby son of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Mahoney was christened recently at Miami Beach, with Champion Gene Turney, present in the capacity of godfather.

The first Sunday school was established in 1780 by Robert Raikes of Gloucester, England.

LIVING AND LOVING

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

Courage, Little Sisters! Love affairs are very wonderful or very harrowing, according to whether or not they are "running smoothly." I wish I could string 'em them out for all my young friends. You probably can't read me, girls, but few indeed are the middle-aged women who have not had more or less of your experience. Mothers may seem placid persons with little romantic about them, but they could tell you stories about the times their hearts were broken and their lives ruined when they were your age.

So cheer up, little sisters, and try to meet your problems with courage. It is not the trials you suffer that will haunt you in a few years, but the way you bore them. Heads up, eyes to the front, and don't let them see that you cannot live without them.

"Dear Mrs. Lee: I have a little love affair. Hope you might be able to straighten it out. A short time ago I became acquainted with a young man whom I learned to love. He called on me several times, and all of a sudden he stopped coming without explanation. When we met he spoke to me and told his friends he thinks I'm a fool. I hope you won't tell me I get interested in a fellow for a while, but I have tried and can't. Do you think he will ever come back?"

"ANSWERS TO KNOW"

Back I could tell you, my dear, but I can't. If you can't get interested in anyone else you'll just have to keep on hoping, but he will wait you out of a broken heart or forget him. Please don't think me harsh. I am sure your courage will be equal to pulling you safely through if he doesn't come back.

Yes, Mary G., when a young man gives you a job of candy,

WOMAN TELLS JUNGLE THRILLS

Formerly a student at Columbia University, editor in Japan and China, correspondent in Tokio during the earthquake, and explorer of the head waters of the Amazon and in the Andes Mountains, Mrs. Katherine Wallis is back to New York with another thrilling story—that of the struggle of herself and her husband, Dr. B. Franklin Wallis, to live out a home and coffee plantation for themselves in the Costa Rican jungles.

Mrs. Wallis, who is in Brookline, is accompanied by her baby daughter, Katherine, 22 months old.

After two years on the headwaters of the Magdalena River she and her husband, former professor of Geology at Bryn Mawr, gave up an unsuccessful gold hunt, and late in 1925 went to Panama searching for manganese deposits. "It's easy to talk about it now," she said, "but it wasn't so easy then. The night on the trails in the jungles with animals of all sorts around you, and snakes and snakes which hang down from the trees and bushes, and touch your cheek as you pass. As an expert, it was wonderful. In actuality it was something that would lead a woman with any trace of unsteady nerves to nightmares. We found the manganese all right, but was too far away from a shipping point to be mined profitably. So then we went to Limon, Costa Rica, and again plunged into the interior. Back up on the side of an old volcano we found a stretch of jungle of about, 300 acres which was ideal for coffee. It was covered mostly with red cedar. So we decided to burn it in to a plantation. Here, too, we had much trouble with wild life. There were jaguars, which came up from the south—a million kinds of

WOMAN OF 62 LEARNS TO FLY

At the age of 62, the Duchess of Bedford, wife of the eleventh Duke of Bedford, is learning to fly. She thinks flying the most exhilarating of all sports, and recently acquired a small airplane, which Capt. Board, a famous civilian pilot, is teaching her to fly. She uses the front lawn of her husband's magnificent residence, Wolurn Abbey, as a taking-off ground.

"For me," the Duchess says, "flying has been the thrill of a life-time. There is none of the dust and dirt of ordinary traveling when you go by air."

It is estimated that there are no less than 2,000,000 girls in the United States named Mary. There are snakes and other animals. We've worked two years on our little plantation. Already we have more than 100 acres cleared and planted. In two years we will have our first crop—after it takes four years' growth before you get production—then we'll be ready to retire.
