BIRMINGHAM
Cameo Kirby, at the Kunsky Birmingham Theater tonight, brings the music of the fiddles as an old Mississippi stern wheeler plies from Cairo to New Orleans; a yellow moon over the clay banks—negro deck hands strumming banjos and singing quaint melodies from the lower deck; in the cabin a poker game beneath socky lights from swinging oil lamps— "sing in the dark."
Lovers of romance will revel in the picture. And what mortal heart that for the colorful things of life?
John Gilbert, a notable screen artist, is a realistic Romeo King. Gertrude Olmstead, in the belle of old New Orleans, is equally well fitted for her part. "Man Hale," in the role of Colonel Meroux, the river gambler, has a picturesque part and the balance of the cast is well chosen.
Friday
Lillian Gish comes to the Birmingham Theater in her first modern role on the screen.
But in "The Enemy," Morris Channing Meyer's dramatic characterization of Pollock's great stage success, she throws all precedent to the wind, to the dregs in the clothes of reality. And she is even more effectively dramatic as a modern woman than even as a Bronia or Anna or Hecuba.
"The Enemy" is a vivid story of Austria's hanging in the days of her last and of her hysteria. On the stage it was held in the drama's grasp, but now it is to the cause of peace and international understanding. On the screen it is a story which is a story that lay bare a woman's soul and a man's heart-prime emotions.
Saturday
A Girl in Every Body, a box office smash of last week, returns to the Broad Street Theater. Victor McLaughlin and Betty Howard Hawks, comes to the Birmingham Theater for a Saturday night. It is a thrilling story, moving to the most interesting and comic parts of the world, and the theme is the love affairs of a youth, self-heated first mate of a steam steamer. Eight leading women, in the exciting area of Hollywood beauties, come for each part to suit and a supporting cast that includes among them, Pauline in the success of the company.
Sunday-Monday
The Lesson of The Londoner, a story of a youth who doesn't want to die. It is a tale of a youth who desperately in his last wish that he should die, but is not allowed to die until he has thought he discovered... that he had betrayed him. It is a story of a youth who posed a group of professional men who show an honorable death upon the field of battle rather than yield to the glories which awaited each of them.
At The Garrick
John Back's "Ringside" originally scheduled to play every night at the Garrick Theater, Detroit. It is the Broadway trial run, entering its fourth week at that house, on Monday night. Debate the heat that prevailed through the first two weeks' run, to draw such large and enthusiastic audiences that Mr. Back was persuaded to stay on. The change...
