

STREET LIGHT SHUNNED BY NEIGHBORHOOD

Whether the night lights are to shine at Aspell and Avonhorne roads in a question Village Manager James W. Parry has before him today. Plans were made to place a light at the intersection, following a recommendation by police and firemen. However, the commission received a letter from Dege's Halpin, a resident of the neighborhood, who said people of the vicinity are opposed to the installation of the light. The letter declared the light would be little more than an "invitation to joy riders." People of both Aspell and Hawthorne roads know their way about the streets and the light would only constitute a bother, Mr. Halpin declared in the letter.

DONOR OF CRANBROOK FOUNDATION PLANS GIFT OF MILLIONS

(Continued from Page 1, Part 2) taste are expressed not only in the structures, as at schools, but in the chapel dedicated to St. Dunstan, patron saint of craftsmen, and in carved images of the church dignitaries as well of Orville Wright, Lincoln, Gutenberg, Faraday and the late Bishop Charles B. Williams.

The remaining portion of Cranbrook, comprising some 125 acres, will be devoted to a School for Girls, the plans of which are being drawn by Henry Scripps Booth, a School of Arts and Crafts, and an Academy of Arts. All the schools are to have as masters and instructors, artists and craftsmen of high rank, who, with the pupils they will attract, will form an artist's settlement or colony.

Mr. Booth's expressed purpose in assembling the schools "is to add to and strengthen the educational facilities within the state of Michigan." His expectation is that the masters of the Academy of Arts and the School of Crafts will reside in the schools and that the students will be trained to the present method. In the Cranbrook School and in the School for Girls, arts and handicrafts will be taught. Pupils showing talent will be encouraged to continue their studies in the Academy of Arts or in the School of Arts and Crafts, others will be prepared for college.

The spirit of the whole educational program is reflected in the prospectus of Cranbrook School thus: "Cranbrook aims to stimulate in the boy responsibility both as to his own conduct and as to those of the community in which he lives. Every effort will be made to develop the spirit of democracy which is inherent in American boyhood."

The Cranbrook educational system begins, therefore, with the Children's School originally founded and is rounded out by the Academy of Arts and the colony of master artists. A child of pronounced artistic gifts can begin at Cranbrook by learning as a B. C. and end by becoming the associate or assistant of a master. Nothing else is so complete and self-contained an artistic educational centre to be found.

George Booth has now disposed of nearly all of his property. When his plans are completed, five schools, and a church, with the acres and which they stand, the whole representing a donation of $12,000,000, will have been turned over to directing boards. The seven trustees of Cranbrook Foundation, of whom three sons of his are charged with the duty of carrying out the plan. The one piece of property retained by Cranbrook is that George Booth has retained in his house.
