RACES BRING OUT THE TAILORED SPORTS SUIT

By LUCY CLAIRE

Fashion Expert for Central Press and The Eccentric

The tailored suit is making itself felt. No, not in material, in style. As I have mentioned before in these articles, fabrics have lost all tradition. Silks are handled according to the tradition for woolsens, and woolsens according to the traditions for silks. The drapes, added to the woolen vogue, though to be sure the woolens are much thinner and more supple than heretofore, and the tailor is being put into the silks, even into the thin silks. So it comes that at the races this year the tailored suit is coming into its own. We have seen a great many worth by smart women at the Belmont race track, for instance. Most of them are fashioned from printed silk, with frock and jacket of the same pattern and material. Kid shoes, we notice, are also supreme, even with the sports costume.

Three of the most popular models seen at the races are sketched above. The first is a three-quarter cloth coat ensemble of navy blue, the coat posed over a frock of polka dot silk on a navy blue ground, and the coat lined with the same. The lining turns over in a shawl collar, which forms the only trimming to the coat. Blue kid shoes were worn with this costume.

The second figure shows a tailored suit of printed silk in a small check pattern, in beige and brown. The frock is in the popular two-piece model, strictly tailored, over which is posed a strictly-tailored coat of the same material, bound with brown. Stroller tan shoes of kid in a one-strap model were worn with this suit.

The third illustration shows a printed silk in a floral design fastened into the tailored jacket suit, with a loose cuffed sleeve. This was in one of the grayed silks of soft colors on a gray ground, bound with the predesignating color in the design. The frock was a one-piece model with surplice effect, with medium large bow of self material in front, a very good model for the slightly stouter figure, by the way. Black glaze kid pumps with buckles, and a black turban of kid in a material were worn with this costume.

Through a Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON

His Outstanding Characteristic

The wife of Sir Henry Bartle Frere, the distinguished English statesman, once had to meet him at a railway station. She took with her a servant who had never seen his master.

"You must go and look for Sir Bartle," she said Lady Frere.

"But how shall I know him?" asked the servant.

"Oh," said Lady Frere, "look for a tall gentleman helping some one."

It is told that the servant found Sir Bartle assisting an old lady out of the railway carriage and so recognized him by the description.

Some one else might have helped the old lady, but they didn't. Even in an age of so-called super-civilization it was possible to distinguish a man by this one characteristic.

About how many of us can it be said that a stranger might recognize us by the fact that if there was anyone in need of help—and there usually is—we would be found helping? On a trolley car would we be known because we gave our seat to a tired-looking old lady? In the rush of modern strenuousness could we be distinguished because, more strenuous than our fellows, we have time to lend a helping hand?

Too often we are like the young fellow who was introduced by a charming maiden to her mother. He responded to the introduction, then said: "It seems to me that your face is very familiar, Mrs. . . ."

"Well?" the good lady replied. "It ought to be. I stood right in front of you when you were seated on the uptown car for one full hour."

Here is a secret: Ever notice the contented look in the eyes of some elderly person who has never been too busy to help others? Whether those receiving the help appear grateful or not there is a peculiar pleasure to being helpful, and the people who miss out on this joy miss out on one of the best parts of life.

LOSES ONE DAD, GETS REGIMENT

By CLARK KINNAIRD

New York, June 27.—Captain James Eaton, World war veteran, formerly of Rochester, N. Y., has died happily. He won his race with death after the ocean to his native land and he knew before death that his little girl Rachel, returning from a tour of the United States, was on her way to his home.

Members of the Twenty-eighth (Keystone) division, composed of Pennsylvania National Guard units, have taken up the joint responsibility of rearing Rachel, a pretty girl of seven.

The first thing they are doing is teaching her English, for she knows only the tongue of France in which she was born. Captain Eaton, for 19 years an officer in the Army, with a record of service in Cuba, China, Mexico and France, remained abroad after the Armistice. Rachel was his daughter by a French woman, but it appears his wife, who developed tuberculosis and died, he contracted the disease caring for her.

Toiled for Weeks
For weeks and weeks, despite rapidly declining health, he toiled to scrape together enough money to pay the passages of himself and his daughter to his native land. He was on the pier at Charburg, a dying man, pleading with the ship's surgeon to permit him to die. The surgeon, however, ordered George Washington, when 400 members of the Keystone division, returning from a tour of the United States, was on her way to his home.

"I am going to die. I want to die in America," Eaton told his fellow veterans. They succeeded in getting the surgeon to lower quarantine bars in favor of the soldier, and made arrangements for the care of the girl, later deciding to formally adopt her.

When the ship reached New York harbor Eaton was in a coma. He revived long enough to murmur, "I knew I'd make it." He died a few minutes after he was carried ashore, a smile upon his face.

Little Rachel is beginning a new life in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Clutch in Darby, Pa. The Clutches have three children, but volunteered to chaperon Rachel for the duration, in which Clutch is an officer.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

MENU HINT
Some time ago we promised liver recipes from time to time to help readers who suffer from anemia, for which liver is especially recommended. We have included several in the column and in the menu following baked liver is used. Everyone should eat liver occasionally for its healthful properties.

Baked Liver (Swedish Style)
Scalloped Spinach
Fresh Pineapple
Plain Cake
Coffee

Baked Liver (Swedish style)—One and one-half pounds beef liver; flour to dredge; salt; pepper; one cup cream or milk; two apples, sliced; six prunes, cooked and stoned; two tablespoons butter; three slices bacon. Select a thick piece of liver. Soak overnight or for several hours in a marinade dressing or in buttermilk. Cut liver on thick side to form a pocket, sprinkle cavity with salt and pepper, then fill with fruit and brown bits of bacon. Sew or skewer liver together. Make several cuts about one-quarter inch deep in outer top surface of liver.

Scalloped Spinach—Two cups spinach; one egg; one-half cup milk; one-half cup bread crumbs, buttered; one-half teaspoon salt; pepper. Mix spinach which has been forced through a sieve with egg, milk and seasonings. Put in crumby and bake in moderate oven until brown.

Suggestion
Cleaning Leather Coat
Someone writes into ask how to clean a red leather coat. I would not take any chances on a home cleaning such a coat. I would send it to a professional cleaner.

Recipe
(Mrs. Mary Mason's Daily Tested Recipe.)
Take this slice of veal steak and cut into two/three-inch pieces. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, then put on each a sprig of parsley or sage, a thin slice of carrot and one of onion. Roll and fasten with toothpick. Brown in butter and add a little water and cook over a slow fire for three-quarters of an hour. Remove birds to platter, thicken gravy and pour over them.
