When Folks Marry

One often hears a young man in his teens or early twenties boast that he will remain a bachelor. But, ah, how vain are such ambitions! The chances are one out of three, according to cold figures, that he can't avoid marriage even at the age of 25. In other words, of nine men single at 25, three are certain to wear the matrimonial yoke before five years have elapsed. The same is true of a young woman. But if a woman is still single at 25, the chances are less than one in five that she will marry before 30; the chances that a man will do so still remain better than one in four. Age has more effect on woman's marriage chances than on a man's. In a general way, every five years added to one's age, between 30 and 50, cuts one's marriage expectancy right in two.

More marriages are between persons without previous matrimonial experience, than is between bachelors and maids. These comprise eight out of ten of all marriages. The next largest groups are widowers with maids, and then widowers with widows, each a little more than one out of every 100. Then come the less likely combinations: divorced men and widows—only a little more than one in 200 marriages, and divorced men with divorced women—less than one such marriage in 300. Twice as many divorced women marry bachelors as married widowers. Indeed, in whatever combination, widowers are always a little more cagey than bachelors.

From one set of figures I learn that for every 100 weddings, 75 men are older than their brides, and 25 are younger. Of every hundred men married in one year—among a selected population of several thousand—86 were bachelors, 12 were widowers and two divorced. Of the 86 bachelors, 80 picked maids, five got widows and one a divorced woman. The 12 widowers married six maids, five widows, and one divorcee. Possibly these figures prove something of importance, but I am not certain just what it is.

Fundamentals Of Cooking Told

To insure good results in cooking these things are essential:

1. An understanding of the recipe.

pe you are using.

2. Careful and accurate measurements.

3. Thorough blending or mixing.

4. Proper temperatures for cooking.

Always read over carefully the directions given so as to have the process in mind, thus obviating constant reference to the recipe. Then follow directions exactly. Each recipe has been tested and worked out by experts and the method given is the simplest and most concise that can be used to insure success.

In recipe level measurements are always used. For accuracy the standard half-pint measuring cup, either in glass, tin or aluminum is recommended. This is marked into quarters, thirds and halves, and does away with poor results due to guess work.

When making puddings and desserts gather all ingredients together and arrange conveniently on the work table so that you can combine them quickly and without mistakes. If baking, have pans greased, flour sifted, eggs beaten, and chocolate melted before beginning to mix. Rub butter and sugar together until a soft cream is obtained. Beat eggs until light and foamy. Pastry flour generally makes lighter, fluffier cakes than bread flour. Chocolate should always be melted over hot water as it burns or scorches very readily over a direct flame, no matter how low it is.

An oven regulator is the surest gauge to correct temperature. If your range is not equipped with one, a regular oven thermometer can be used very successfully. The simplest and surest test to tell when a cake is cooked long enough is to press the finger lightly on the top of the cake. If done the cake will spring back, leaving no sign of a dent; if not done a slight depression will remain.

All chocolate cakes should be baked in a moderate oven in order to insure uniform baking. Mixtures containing chocolate will scorch quickly on bottom and sides if a hot oven is used.

JEWELRY

Built-in jewelry is important. Do you dislike the weight of a pendant suspended round your neck?

For you was designed the simple frock unadorned save for a harmonious pendant—lapis with blue, jade with green, topaz with brown—hung on a ribbon of fabric like the dress, fastened in at the shoulder seams.

On a similar principle is an evening dress, with a net yoke which serves as nothing more than an anchor for an applique of rhinestones in the form of a necklace with a drop. Likewise built-in are the breast pin and buckle of another evening gown, one of them regulating the draped neckline, the other holding a gypsy girdle in place, both providing the color note.

Choose your own costume jewelry on these principles keeping in mind the shape best suited to the place it will be worn and the total effect of your costumes is sure to be improved.

Pecan Nut Cakes

One-quarter cup butter or shortening, one cup light brown sugar, two eggs, two-thirds cup milk, one cup chopped pecan nuts, one and two-thirds cups pastry flour, two teaspoons baking powder.

ROLLINS MERRILL KAYSER EVENKINT

In this week's window display we are calling attention to feminine underapparel. Specifically, the warning is out for Easter brides. But it should be a worthwhile reminder to all Birmingham women. Silk daintiness in Steppies, Bloomers, Combination Suits, Vest, Girdles, Brassieres, and Combinettes find color in Peach, Flesh and Pink. The material is silk, rayon or mercerized, plain or brocaded.

With the departure of colds, handkerchiefs play the role of accessory. Their usefulness is practically lost but this is quickly supplanted by the decorative value.

Offerings in Silk, Rayon, and Linen. Hand painted, plain and embroidered.

The washable tailored kid glove like the one illustrated here is one of the newest glove notes for the coming season. Others in Chamoisette or Suede.

When baby is dressed for Easter Sunday, a bonnet will be in order. Of course it must be light and flimsy and reflect the spirit of the season. Make this baby's headquarters.

Booties, dresses, stockings, bathrobes, and other accessories completely stocked.
