One of Birmingham’s Early Industries

OLD MILL

"Birmingham may take pride in a lot of progressive development during the past 10 years, but without gold, "But what is" the old mill that was dug down at the end of Quarter's Pond? I remember when the was there a small mill that was built on the same spot, not over a century ago." In 1896, while Michigan was still a territory and only a year after the first settlers elected - Birminghams'" pioneer residents.

After a great amount of labor the old mill was raised on the site of the old mill. The mill was raised by the miller, Mr. Hansen, using the old mill's machinery and rebuild the mill. Now, the mill is a monument to the hard work and skill of the millers of the past.

The mill was not only for its ability to grind corn, but also for its ability to grind corn. It was also used to grind corn by the miller's neighbors. The miller's neighbors would bring their corn to the mill to be ground and the miller would charge them a fee for the service.

The mill was eventually sold to a farmer who used it to grind corn for his farm. Today, the mill is a monument to the hard work and skill of the millers of the past. It is a reminder of the importance of hard work and the value of a community working together.

REMEMBER?

"No picnic without a 'snack'" was the saying of a half-century ago, and in the days of the country store our hands were more than a bandage. The "snack" was a common place to find food and a place to socialize. Today, the "snack" is still a place to find food and a place to socialize.

The Village Band

"The Village Band" was formed in the early 1920s by a group of men who were interested in music. They started playing music in the streets and parks of the village, and soon gained a following.

They played a variety of music, from traditional tunes to popular songs of the day. The band was known for its ability to perform in any weather, and they would often play in the rain or snow.

The Village Band was a source of pride for the village, and they were a favorite for many of the residents. They continued to perform until the early 1930s, when the Great Depression hit and many of the band members were unable to continue playing.

The band was later revived in the 1980s, and they continue to perform today. They are a beloved part of the village's history and culture.