DETROIT MEDIC TALKS TO CLUB

Futility of Conflict Decried in Address Given Here

Dr. Angus McLean, of Detroit, who served during the world war, reviewed the history of the war in regard to death and disability in a talk Thursday night before members of the Oakland County Medical association at the Chateau Tea Room.

"There have been 13,000 war that history and legend have recorded," he said, "and only about a dozen of them have ever secured anything. The wars have left 250,000,000 widows and several billion orphans. There are at present about two billion persons living on this earth, and about seven billion have been killed in wars of the past."

Dr. McLean pointed out that one of the regrettable features of war was that the nation's finest men, mentally and physically, were killed while those physically defective remained at home and eventually became fathers of much of the next generation.

CASS

The fighting devils of the French Foreign Legion have been made famous in song and story, and several times they have figured in stage productions. But never have these picturesque and adventurous warriors of France been utilized on the stage in such colorful fashion as in "The Desert Song," Schwab and Mandel's famous operetta, which after fifteen months in New York and nine months in Chicago, is now at the Cass Theater for an engagement.

Aside from its French atmosphere, "The Desert Song" is a production of the most sumptuous stage offering of this or any other stage. Rich in dramatic plot, studied with musical gem from the pen of Sigmund Romberg produced in the grand and lavish style of the operetta, it is for 150 people, all of whom can sing and act. "The Desert Song" actually thrills the audience and sends it home recalling the vividness of the story and the haunting strains of the music.

The scenes of "The Desert Song" are laid in Morocco during the recent uprising of the Rif against the French government and all the principal characters are French. There are the French governor at Fez, his son, who hides with the Arabs till his father shows him the true light; there is the beautiful and romantic Margot Benvalat, who follows her lover to Africa; there is the amusing correspondent of the Paris Herald, and the scores of French girls who, have come to Morocco to be near their sweethearts and husbands. Opposed to them are the grim fighting men of the hills and the desert, and throughout the play there is the conflict of East against West, not only in the ideas of political supremacy, but in their theories on love and life.

Sigmund Romberg, who composed the music for "Blossom Time," "The Student Prince" and other big musical successes of recent years, also provided the melodies of "The Desert Song," and in their theories on love and life. An augmented orchestra helps to do justice to the thrilling music, while the choruses, both male and female, are of grand opera caliber. These who enjoy the very best in musical romance will do well to miss "The Desert Song."

TRIBUTES HELD FOR MRS. IVES

Pioneer Succumbs Following Death of Artist Son

Mrs. Margaret Wright Ives, 85 years old, well known to residents of Birmingham and Detroit, died Tuesday morning from a heart ailment at her home on Southfield road, with which she had lived since the death of her son, Percy Ives last February. Augustus P. Record, pastor of the Unitarian Church, of Detroit officiated and burial was in Elmwood cemetery.

Mrs. Ives was born in New York City in 1843 and when a young woman moved to Pontiac. Since then she has spent most of her life in the vicinity of Detroit and Pontiac.

She was the daughter of Augustus P. Leggett and Eliza Susan Leggett of New York City. She was educated in New York City and at the age of 17 married Lewis T. Ives, well known portrait painter.

She is survived by her son, Dr. Ives, a brother, Mortimer Leggett, and a sister, Mrs. Anna Randall, both of Drayton Plains.

An interesting romance was woven about the courtship of Mr. and Mrs. Ives. Ives was in the Los Angeles branch of the father of Lewis T. Ives, who was then a youth studying law. In 1861 he was in California, working on a ranch and a brother-in-law of the young man was living on the same land that they called on the Leggetts when they were living in Drayton Plains and Lewis Leggett met Margaret Leggett.

This same territory which was then the property of the Ives family is now owned by W. C. Leland of the Cadillac Motor company and Eliza Ives is living in the homeestead which the Leggetts built when they moved to Drayton Plains from New York City.

It was Valentine S. Seaman, grandfather of Mrs. Ives, who introduced vaccination for smallpox into this country after studying under Jenner in Europe.

Among many relatives in Birmingham who survive Mrs. Ives are two nieces, Miss Margaret Whittemore, Mrs. Rice Howell and one nephew, Fred Leggett.

NEWSPAPER FILES RECALL CAMPAIGN IN THE OLD 'WET DAYS'

A statement published by the Detroit Free Press Tuesday morning in its editorial columns, "Outraged Back the Pages," contains the following paragraph as of 20 years ago:

"The present practice of allowing the saloons to keep open Saturdays from 12 to 8 o'clock and on week day nights until 12 and 1 o'clock, would be satisfactory to him if it had the sanction of the law."

An interview here this week with Mr. Howarth who, with his son, Donald, own the insurance agency of Howarth & Son, brought forth smiling reminiscences of those days in Detroit when he, with Hazen Pingree, owned the old Pingree Shoe company.

"Those were strenuous days in Detroit and cupidity and laxity of law enforcing agencies was as pronounced—if not more so—than during present times," stated Mr. Howarth.

"This committee of 100 was composed chiefly of members of the Detroit-Board of Commerce, and existed solely for the purpose of trying to keep the city a law-abiding community. The committee's activities along liquor enforcement lines was not prohibitory in intent; all we wanted to accomplish was an observance of the state laws and city ordinances governing this subject."

"When the names of our committee of 100 were published, the brewers and distillers immediately set about to break down their morale. Members of the committee who had any skeletons in their closets were threatened with all sorts of exposures, and many of them resigned. My own opinion of those days is that, if the brewers and distillers themselves had been willing to abide by the laws, the national prohibition laws would not have been enacted at so early a date in our country's history."

Impressions . . .

A man's home creates impressions. There is a sort of personality about it, and often one can tell much about the owner, just from viewing the house he lives in. As a man's personality is reflected in the type of automobile he drives, in the kind of clothes he wears, and in his reading list . . . so is his personality reflected in his home. One of the most important features of a man's home is—of course—the grounds about it. What kind of an impression does the landscaping about your home make?

Let us advise you on your landscape needs. Make sure your home reflects your personality.
